You can always write them a letter and ask nicely for the details
Don't let us stop you..
And it would be far more productive than you whining here about it.

Yes, but the appendix does have a purpose, surgery is not an improvement, but in cases of infection, a life saving fix ... but then, if you had gangrene in your penis, a surgeon might be a very desirable thing ... one can always hope for positive results from reconstructive surgery, later ... <silly-grin>

Yes, that is what predatory economics is, isn't it, "not seeing" anything which gets in the way of profits ... the many pay the costs of supporting the "special few."

The evil is a bit more hidden that what you see there, on the surface.

Planned obsolescence causes you to purchase new items to replace the old. The costs in resources, energy, oil, creation of pollution/toxins, dumps fill with obnoxious wastes, etc. is slowly poisoning not only all of us, but the whole planet.

The impetus should be placed on strong, durable, long lasting products, if possible, possessions which will last a lifetime, or even be handed down. The benefits in cost, heath and happiness would be astounding ...

Instead, we are a bunch of "moronic consumers." Trained to buy products which wear our quickly, so we will consume more ... etc., the cycle is a very vicious one. Not only depriving us of wealth and happiness, but even our health and life.

To turn this absurdity of "consumerism" around, at this point, looks like a monumental task bordering on the line of impossible!

Indeed, laws are constructed to aid in the filling of dumps, and for questionable reasons and refusal to debate other alternatives ...

Well, to be blunt, and restate, so you don't miss the point, this time
... it would be an excise in hopeless to explain most anything to a wastes the time of the one explaining -- me.

Wrong. It's would be up to those being sued to prove it was true and thus wasn't slander.

Fine, why do you think they have to be, much less why shouldn't we assume legitimate reasons by goggle?

Before we can dismiss Google's actions as legitimate in the interests of anti-defamation, we need to know that the instance was, indeed, defamation.

Given Google's history in the last 12 months alone, assuming legitimacy of any Google action based entirely on their own say-so, is no different than leaving money in an Enron 401K based entirely on Kenneth Lay's assurances that Enron's finances were secure.

"You're not smart enough to understand it.."
It only proves that you're the idiot.

Watch your local newspapers this winter and note the incredible number of house fires that will be occurring courtesy of Chinese made space heaters. There has been a record number of winter house fires across the USA the past decade. A phenomenon undoubtedly linked to the horrendous quality of the made in commie China junk being imported into this nation.
It is truly criminal. It wasn't that long ago that the Chinese were caught counterfeiting the Underwriters Laboratory stamp of approval and putting on the junk they imported to the USA. Thanks to the criminals in D.C. we can't buy Cuban cigars or sugar but Red China destroying our economy and killing our citizens (and pets via poison pet foods) isn't a problem.

I have a bunch of old, old, old electric space heaters.I don't use them though, instead of using them, I bought two Lasko quartz space heaters at the Lowe's store.They work OK.

It was hard rubbish collection time in our suburb this week.

The verges were lined with working TVs - everyone has upgraded to cheap LCD/Plasma. The other things that stuck out were hooded BBQ's. Almost every third or fourth house had one out the front. Cheap chinese crap rusting away, most only a year or two old. At between $200 and $400 each its a disgusting waste of money & resources.

And you can run those apps on Mac OS X.

I believe that most of the time the buyers are aware that there is something fishy and look the other way. Very good quality terminal blocks from China with tracable cUL and VDE approvals are X CNY, less good ones without approvals are X/2.5.

What kind of irresponsible buyer fails to check the certification number with CSA/UL/ETL or fails to schedule a pre-shipment inspection at the factory? The added cost is a small percentage of even a small shipment of a container load or two.

I've heard some of these jokers (last week, as it happens) say that the product "must have UL _markings_". That's all they care about, and the factory must comply or they lose the order.

This is the first I heard of fake UL stickers.

By buyer, you mean the store and not the customer. Well, I hope that is what you mean. The customer sees the UL label and just assumes it is legit.

Occasionally I will get cheap ass stuff from Harbor Freight, but I refuse to buy anything from them that plugs into the mains. I was in the store once when a guy was returning a sawzall that caught fire.

Getting back to generators, a Yamaha costs about 3x the Chinese junk. I can see why people buy Chinese, but I'd sure hate to have to depend on the Chinese item working when I need it.

I'm buying old electrical products from 2nd hand stores now. I got an old 1940's Kirby all metal vacuum which still runs great! Got several old 1960's phones which work when the power goes out. Got an old 1950's sewing machine - all metal. Etc.

And I have the money to buy brand new. I have bought brand new and the things don't last but a month sometimes! I'm fed up, so back to old for me...

Unfortunately, I can't say the same. I was tempted to buy a big roll of green RoHS or CE stickers to stick all over the place, but..

>By buyer, you mean the store and not the customer.

Yes, of course- the professional buyers for the store or the wholesaler or the importer. The end purchaser should be able to trust the store (and steer clear if it's a guy selling from the back of a truck or whatever).

I bought some metal power bars recently (about 4' long) that looked pretty decent, but I don't usually buy their electric power tools. Their air tools seem decent.

The power bars are marked with the factory name and their model number, but interestingly the model I have (EM1201) is not listed in the ETL/Intertek database, but the similar EM1201M is.. and Harbor Fright seems to have discontinued the product. As it's all metal I'm not particularly worried- unless the sockets pull out, it can't do much that's bad.

There's good and bad- the worst stuff is pretty bad. You don't hear about the AC adapters made for Dell or Apple causing much trouble, despite enormous quantities and cutthroat cheap prices. There are several basic kinds of factories in China- from wholly owned foreign ones to joint ventures, to state companies, to local firms. Unless they have some history of supplying picky customers (especially European and Japanese exports) the lower end ones can be pretty dodgy.. many, many concentrate on the large and (so far) less discriminating domestic market. There are probably as many as 1,000 factories making generators, for example, certainly in the hundreds.

There was a warning a couple of years ago about Chinese rubber.
This had to do with Chinese scooters, the rubbers seem to fall apart after a year and you can throw the whole thing away.
You want Taiwan.
I had Chinese rubber bands that just fell apart after some weeks.
Bought from a respectable place (Albert Heijn here).
So stay clear of anything that has Chinese rubbers in it.

The cheap 3 dollar 4 some cents Chinese multimeters I bough have also great lead free soldering, note how the shunt is soldered:

There are a lot of very cheap tool sets around made of steel 10 (if that exists).

Generalisation is a very dangerous thing.
They have good stuff too.
Lots of it.

Inform yourself before you buy, google will tell you how the situation is for a particular product.

If you did not type the product name and something like 'review' or 'problem' or 'experience' in google, then you were gambling.
The same goes for any country, or product.
My opinion of my Samsung 3D TV is there as a warning on my site for anybody for example.
And that is not Chinese.
Sometimes you learn the hard way.
And, for that money you got to accept some things sometimes too, especially if it can be easily fixed, as with that cheap meter,

The most interesting fact is that everything is made in China these days. That Yamaha generator is also made in China but Yamaha is probably on top of quality control. The same generators are probably sold under many different brands with lesser components.

Yeah, I had a generator, this summer, throw a rod through the garage wall. The finest Chinese machine work you'd ever like to see punch a hole in a building.

Went with a Generac from Whitewater, Wisconsin.

I see a list of benefits, but so far haven't found a statistical analysis of them. I have to leave shortly and will follow links when I get back.

It's not hard to find lists of benefits for almost any medical procedure. And there are tests being done by physicians that are statistically more dangerous than the disease they test for. Whether or not this applies to circumcision should be tested with actual studies that include the measured dangers & benefits of circumcision.

The important word above is "measured".

Be careful. Longevity is one thing, but safety standards were not nearly as high in the old days-- both insulation safety standards and inclusion of things like approved thermal cutoffs. There used to be hundreds of people dying every year from fires caused by televisions, and I've been shocked a few times by the old metal power tools that developed internal shorts. Some old TVs and radios were "hot" chassis.

The same company who made the generator that failed after 5 months.
They won't honor the two years warrenty because i am over-using it (200 hours). It's a standby generator, i am not suppose to use it, stupid.

By the way, should I sue a WI company in Federal court? I don't think they registered in CA.

Mine is a continuous service generator. So, it's built to a different standard. A standby is a different animal.

That said, you don't really get to pick when your power is out.

But failed after 200 hours? That's less than two weeks of use.

No one that I know, practices any kind of religious totalitarianism, to such an invective, that they should be overcritical of our current communication infrastructure, other than those who hate those rich capitalist manufacturers (who over-use things like Federal Express), or if they use UPS, the rich inventors that seem to have such a monopoly in choosing who will mass produce their invention, that would have the effect of increasing mass UPS transit to light speed, for example.

A 'grey' market or underground economy need not be a black market, but it sure beats the crap out of generational monopolies - like oil markets or non-commercial space transportation. Dark photons might be considered kind of an extraterrestrial 'dark market' of energy trading commodity futures, similar to a grey market, with the exception that trade would be secretive, unregulated, but perfectly legal:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Commodity_futures
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=sdo_ECYbbH4
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KEbydQuNQu8&NR=1

These game video presentations seem what science faction was all about, before it became subjugated and marginalized into science fiction. The kind of people that enjoy these kinds of things are more like gamers than they are scientists, but the art and style are futuristic and dreamlike, in order to excite the fascination of perhaps, a ten or twelve year old.

The problem with our jobs market is that it is too earth-bound. The key to unlocking interstellar trade is cheap and reliable space transportation. That would be a quantum science lab that deals with things like ion space drives and quantum tunneling - but not 3D special effects - unless making the experience eventally a holograqphic one - in order to stimulate a semi-conscious A.I.

interface between thought, imagination, and actual interaction with the dynamic of an interstellar, or asteroid mining mission.

With all of the air radar systems used today in the the radiative technology presented, it would sure be a good time to mass-produce SAR digital processors for extraterrestrial use. Since it's easy enough to gather data processing info used in the gamma ray spectrometer on the Lunar Prospector, why not perform 'Monte Carlo' type simulations, using 90 spectral lines and a continuum gamma ray background with the right version of EGS4 code?

Detectors can then become modeled for filtering the spectra desired. I think there is a program pif.exe, that can determine the detector specific properties, with the proper egs-4 files installed.

There are also such things as image processing simulators, written in VHDL, which go by language of the sort:

while (frame <= nframe) loop for j in 0 to NPULSE-1 loop
for pol in HH to VV loop
if pol=HH or polbv(pol)='1' then read_pri(rod, aux, rangex, pol, dataoutstrobe,dataout)

save rangex (used to select krnl)

manage lats as a ring buffer

cdft(cbuf1,NRANGE,-1);
--Apply RCS weighting.
for i in 0 to NRANGE -1 loop crmult(cbuf1(i),cbuf1(i),rcs(i));
end loop;
move data to cornerturn buffers end if;
end loop;
end loop;
--Now that frame has been range processed, perform azimuth --processing along each range gate.
--Find the initial convolution kernel kernel0 := 8 - integer(sar_math.math_real.round.....
((init_range-current_range)/(swath/16.0)));
for pol in HH to VV loop
if polbv(pol)='1' then

--output header info for frame and polarization write_frm_hdr(auxhh, pol, dataint1, dataintstrobe1);
for i in 0 to NRANGE-1 loop
for j in 0 to 2*NPULSE-1 loop
crbuf(j) := cbuf(j,i);
end loop;
--Perform DFT.
cdft(crbuf,2*NPULSE,-1);
--Multiply DFT result by convolution kernel.
index := kernel0 + (i*16)/NRANGE;
for j in 0 to 2*NPULSE-1 loop
cmult(crbuf(j),crbuf(j),cphase(index,j));
end loop
--Perform IDFT.
cdfti(crbuf,2*NPULSE,-1);
--Write the second half of this range cell to file.
for j in NPULSE to 2*NPULSE-1 loop send one complex value to fifo_real end loop;
end loop;
end if;
end loop;
frame:=frame+1;
end loop;
wait;

There are two conversion programs available for use in both C and VHDL simulators: ascii2bin, which converts an ASCII file to binary format for use in a C simulator, and bin2ascii, which converts a binary file to ASCII format for use in a VHDL simulator.

I've also got a java applet written in Fortran that can input data from an RS-422 Multiformat Dynamic Simulator Card:

True. Depending on maintenance, that should be a brisk walk for this kind of product. Regardless of build.

How often did you change the oil? And did you do a break-in change? That will make an enourmous difference.

Sound like the same problem with my WI made GenXXX standby generator.
I haven't open it up yet, The rotor lock up, perhaps by the starter.

They says every 200 hours. I didn't know they mean changing the machine every 200 hours.

Yes.

Back in the 1980s I bought a used 21 foot Winnebago motorhome.Before I finally got rid of the motorhome I gave the Onan generator to my brother in law.

You can build your own generator.Find a good used American made engine and get to it, or check out the government surplus auctions or Military surplus stores or newspapers classifieds.Some RV dealerships might have some good used ones for sale.

On the other hand, I already have two small American made engines.One of them is a two cylinders 16 horsepower electric start Briggs & Stratton horizontal shaft engine.It has never been used before, it is in like new condition.It was on a slightly wrecked riding lawn mower I bought at a scrap iron yard.The other one is an American made one cylinder 5 horsepower Briggs & Stratton horizontal shaft engine.I bought it for $25.00 at a lawn mower shop.Both engines run real Good.

Those Chinese fake UL labels date back to at least ten years ago.I remember something about them from a local TV news program.

Honda is pretty good, but you're going to pay more. A good Honda 4000W generator is maybe $2,200 vs. Harbor Fright's $339 for 3500W and $499 for 5,500W. "Sportsman" has a 4000W one for $329.

Some generators are made for intermittent service, only. A few hours on, many hours off. Too many hours on and metal fatigue sets in.

This is to accomodate a price point.

You may have, indeed, overrun the machine's ability to serve in a continuous stretch.

I think, the Americans were on the better side, most of the time. A lot of people around the globe lived in conditions, that were/are far worth.

But now something is going wrong in your country, what really worries me.

My 'working hypothesis' is like this:
There are sort of 'bad guys', that cooperate silently around the globe.
Their objective is something like a forth Reich - on global level.

The mayor stumbling block now are actually the Americans, since they have grown too strong. So the 'bad guys' try to dumb down, rip off (and so forth) the US citizens.
This is not only bad for the US citizens, but also for the rest of the world, since than the 'bad guys' would win.

So I think about possible 'cures'.

For example:

think about Halloween next week.
But what do you actually celebrate?

Kids go around and 'demand' sweets. In my opinion, that is almost a 'kids-crime', since it is sort of 'robbery' as childs play. Than all these masks and reference to witchcraft, voodoo and death, than cannot possibly be helpful.
(The sweets are bad for the health anyhow, since they consist only of glucose, citric acid, fat, artificial flavours and colours.)

Other example is education:
I've read comments about how they teach mathematics. That was totally strange. Teaching is an asymmetric relation: someone has the knowledge and someone learns. The directions of information goes from teacher to pupil. So the teacher has to do just that: teach. If the pupil decide, what they want to learn, they learn nothing.

How about health?
Americans pay a lot, but do not get healthier. Why that?
Maybe its the food (mainly), don't know.

But better health is not only nicer to have, but also saves a lot of money.

Very helpful is cleanness at home and good food. Most fast-food or convenience-food is very unhealthy (and expensive). So I suggest, that people learn to cook again, possibly in school, since this would not only enhance health, but also frees energy (and money), what could be helpful in times of trouble.

What is the definition of power outage?

The only time it was on for more than 5 hours was during the 10 hours Arizona power blockade of S.CA. Otherwise, i ran it for the pool pump one or two hours every day or other day. It was 200 total hours, 100 cycles over 5 months. I did not know it was engineered to fail after 100 cycles and void the warrenty. By the way, i brought it from the AZ dealer of Generac. I guess nothing good come out of AZ. Sorry, had to rub it on JT.

But i want to run on NG. I paid $1700 for the Generac 8KW. Are there conversion kits for NG?

Such as the Craftsman riding mower that I bought used several years ago. Made in USA. Powered by Briggs & Stratton. Used weekly about 6-7 months out of the year. I have replaced the blades a couple of times and the battery about a year ago. Otherwise, maintenance is changing oil and filters, sharpening blades, new spark plug yearly. I have a spare set of belts (drive and blades) but haven't yet needed to replace either of them.

I also have a Craftsman self-propelled walk-behind that's probably 10+ years old. I replaced part of the drive mechanism several years ago.
Maintenance is changing oil, replacing air filter, replacing drive belt, sharpening blade, new spark plug yearly.

It's all about who can make the widget cheapest and sell it for less.
WaMart wants suppliers to give them better prices each year to keep their product(s) in the WalMart stores. For one-time-use things, cheapest may be most economical, such as a drop cloth over an old bookcase while painting a room - if some minimum level of protection is adequate, the under $2 drop cloth may be fine. For covering funriture being moved in the back of a pickup, I'll opt for something sturdier- the cheapest possible covering will NOT survive the trip.

There are also the "new" gadgets that people don't know are old ideas resurrected. Example: the Subaru ad touting their "hill holder" - take your foot off the brake and the car won't roll back while the clutch is in. The hill holder was introduced on the 1936 Studebaker, so it's most defintely NOT new.

Not that I know of, but there are options:

1) This company will sell you a conversion kit:
http://www.propane-generators.com/honda-generators.htm . If you don't feel like taking on that project, they will sell you a brand new already-converted Yamaha unit with a factory warranty. I love Honda generators, but think that Yamaha generators are at least as good as Honda. My little bit of experience with that company has been good.

2) A Google search will find companies that who sell you a Honda-POWERED natural gas generator. Caveat emptor.

Well, it wasn't engineered to fail after 100 cycles. But it does look like you've got a valid complaint.

You may want to take this higher up in the company. Satisfaction is possible, if you're persistent enough. The local retailers often count on the fact that most people aren't .

Yes, i will take it to the top. Few years ago, i had a dispute with Walmart's associate. I send one letter to the store, Got one phone conversion with the district manager. Ten months later, i send one RSVP to Sam. We, including the judge, were so disapointed not to see Sam there, not even his associate or council.

I guess i will have to RSVP Aaron Jagdfeld, CEO of Generac.

Which can be seen also in the history of Domino's Pizza and other companies that cheapen their product in pursuit of profit only to end up losing significant portions of their customer base due to an inferior product and thus losing profits in the long run.

It may vary by model, but Honda small motors are made in China. Even their lawn mowers are made in China. I my old Honda Mower (about 20 years old) by a local shop that knew the old Japanese engines. The thing didn't actually fail as much as I put in stale gas that clogged it up. But I got the thing refurbed and it certainly is better than anything made in China.

Regarding the comment on Yamaha, my understanding is they still made their own motor, which is why the Honda inverter generator sales have gone to Yamaha. The 2nd from the bottom of the line model has a cast cylinder sleeve and is claimed to be a real work horse.

At least Dominos has figured that out and changed the substance on their pizzas. I have tried one and it wasn't bad. I normally go to a small pizza maker not far away who makes most excellent pizza and, no matter what other pizzas (chain or single owner) I have tried I always go back to him.

I used to own a Honda Moped, it had a 4 stroke engine on it.I bought it used for $35.00.I used to also own a Ciao Italian Moped (it wasen't worth a sheet!) and a made in Italy Harley Davidson one cylinder Motorbike, I bought it for $35.00 too.One time I bought two Rokon frames and three Rokon wheels at a scrap iron yard.
http://www.rokon.com
I almost bought a Honda three wheeler at that same scrap iron yard.I had removed the front fork and wheel, (to make it easier for me to load it in my van) an old guy I knew showed up, he wanted that old Honda three wheeler more than I did, so I let him get it.Those old Honda three wheelers (one wheel in front, two wheels on the rear) can be dangerous, if you don't watch out the rear wheels will climb up your legs.I think they were finally outlawed in America.
I have owned three old Cushman motor scooters before.I am too wibbly wobbly nowadays for two wheelers, I don't ride them anymore, including my 1976 made in Germany Hercules Moped I now own.

Yep, I have one like that in Manassas. Great pizza, a bit on the oily side, but flavor that can't be beat and a decent price.

Don't know about that... but one reason I'm leaning to the Yamaha products is some of their inverter units use the "starting battery" (for those that have electric start, of course) to provide some additional capacity to handle the starting-draw current.

4632. Frank Rossio (KK6FR) Transformed into Macy's Day Parade Balloon - His Blackhole!

This is a terrible dream I had about KK6FR the Happy Ham.
It is unimaginable but I'll try. Now imagine the theme song of the Twilight Zone protruding out of your ears as a 3D like camera descends down into Frank Rossio's trailer in Phelan California. A rattlesnake hisses and rattles outside Franks bathroom window.
Frank is on the shitter grunting and a readin' the National Enquire with a picture of Noel Burman on the cover - the headline screams "Ham Operator transformed into Prima Donna 3840 Shortwave Tranny Queen"! Frank continues his grunting at the same time howling like a wolf for his loaf to expunge out his flea infested bowels. Frank's tongue hangs out side of his mouth, slobbering, panting, dripping sweat as a line dance of flies circles around his head. He looks like a caricature out of Mad Magazine. Gail his bucktoothed lover plump pony tailed beeatch slave opens the bathroom door! She screams "That incredible stench!!!" She shrieks over the smell of rotted cabbage and frijoles and screams like something out of the movie Psycho. Franks asshole quivers and a loud hissing sound echoes off the bathroom walls. Wait! Wait! Frank's shithole is being transformed into a massive blackhole. Gails long hair gets sucked up into the hole as the town of Phelan, the state of California, the U.S. of A and the world are swallowed up into Franks pulsating sphincter! A horrid "sluuuuurp!" as Franks shitter is transformed into a blackhole. Gravity waves belches out of Franks shit chute. In an instant if you can picture this. You know those Macy Day Thanksgiving inflated balloons? Imagine a gigantic bloated Frank Rossio, bulging arms like Popeye, bloated legs and a fat bloated pregnant belly. Nekkid. Floating face down in space, where the Earth stood still. Franks fat ass black hole consumes the remnants of the Moon. Rumbling in his belly is contained another world, seen in the stomach lining is the flamboyant Greg lisping and flapping his wrists to make an emergency contact, his dog Whisky howling and clawing at Franks stomach lining to free him and his master. A Steve Wingate being consumed by the hot air of Franks colon, pieces of Wingnuts face fall off like melted wax from blasts of Frank's pressurized hot rotted gut gas. Last but not least a red Chinese eyed Noel Burman is being squeezed like a piece of cheese into Franks steamy rectal canal waiting to birthed out of Franks ass cheeks hence farted back into space. A couple of the foul mouthed regulars were already gassed out and tangled in Franks nest of dingleberries looking like a bunch of grapes leering at the mass of Frank Rossio's hemorrhoids. Life sure sucks to those that have known Frank. Pure horror till we cut to Frank's face his quivering puffer fish lips mutters "Grease is the word." A rubber band - band plays stars and stripes forever as it eternally circles Franks butt cheeks.

They are Generac reseller. These are for standby only. Don't ever try to use them, stupid (customers).

Funny math and science:

Greek: 50% default is not a default. We can cut another 50% of the remaining debts, and do it again and again, etc.

French: China will give us 100B, we can increase it with deflector shields and reflective multipler by 100x. It's not smoke and mirror.
World debt problems are over.

Germany: We can pull in several more China from other Universes.
Problem solved.

Generac: There are less than 200 hours in a two-years (730 days)
warranty.

You already have a walk behind lawn mower, don't you? Rig a V belt pulley on the engine shaft and a piece of angle iron to mount a junk yard alternator, one or two 12 Volt batteries and an Inverter.You can have 12 Volt D C power and 115 Volts A C power.Some walk behind lawn mowers have a 6.5 horsepower engine.I have one, actually I have two walk behind lawn mowers.That damn ethanol gas screwed one of them up, I will fix it someday.Winter time is a good time to check the pawn shops for a good used walk behind lawn mower.

That's nothing.. I had a friend two blocks over.. newly installed Generac standby. (propane).. throw a rod after operating for a just few hours during Hurricane Wilma. It took them 8 days to get a replacement motor. (their power was out for ~16 days)..

Meanwhile, My 2200 RPM 2.5Kw Diesel.. ran for 10(5 in am, 5 in pm) hours a day for 13 days, no problem, finally used up most of my 6 year old diesel fuel(~18 gallons).

To coin an expression.....they make a sausage and pepperoni with extra cheese that is to die for. Hmmmm, come to think of it, I believe most all their pizzas come with extra cheese. ;)

We have a pizza place here that does that same thing. Only problem is the pizzas are crap. The place is called Cici's.

My VERY local pizzaria Soprano's Pizzeria, makes a barely edible pie, but can't make a thin crust to save their lives, as he likes the dough droopy and too chewy, even when you ask for a THIN CRUST/NJ/ Italian style.
Plus he's a racist SOB that kept asking me how my "Chink Wife" is doing, and why I go to the bakery next door to him that's run by "ragheaded niggers".

I once gave them a thumbs up because of their entres, but they went VERY down hill since they showed their colors.

Liberty Net: October 22, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/10/liberty-net-october-22-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

A LOT OF WORK is going on behind the scenes to let some of the Liberty Net participants who are temporarily off the air take part via phone patch on N2IRJ. The same patch would also allow non-amateur guests to take part in the discussions. Look for results this week or next!

Here are some of the ideas brought to light this time on amateur radioï¿½s most exciting net:

ï¿½ The price tag for allowing the alleged ï¿½Nobel Peace Prizeï¿½ president to murder Qaddafi was at least $1.3 billion. (14 minutes)

ï¿½ Now that they hope the American fools have forgotten the 2011 deadline for withdrawal from Iraq, the regime is declaring that our troops ï¿½need to stayï¿½ ï¿½ indefinitely. (16 minutes)

ï¿½ On MSNBC it is now forbidden to mention the unquestioned statistics which show that 47% of the population pay no federal taxes. The reason? It is, supposedly, ï¿½racistï¿½ to mention that admitted fact. (26 minutes)

ï¿½ The UN is apparently now ï¿½racistï¿½ too, because their latest study indicates that homicide rates ï¿½ by far ï¿½ are greater in the non-White areas of Africa and Latin America than in any other part of the world. (29 minutes)

ï¿½ Louisiana has introduced a bill banning the use of cash as payment for second hand goods ï¿½ in a desperate move to spy on and tax private exchanges like yard sales and flea markets. (37 minutes)

ï¿½ Unlike the rest of the White world, Russia has instituted pro-baby policies designed to stop the decline of the native White population. These policies have resulted in their highest birth rates in 20 years. (51 minutes)

ï¿½ The real lesson of Libya is this: Never trust the regime in Washington. In very recent years Qaddafi was an ally of Washington, US troops were training his forces, and Republican and Democrat leaders alike were shaking his hand and hailing him. (54 minutes)

ï¿½ Louisianaï¿½s anti-cash bill will send you to jail for five years if you sell three used books or baby toys ï¿½ or anything ï¿½ at your yard sale without obeying the governmentï¿½s draconian commands. Detailed reporting requirements kick in if you sell more than one item per month. Strangely, though, pawn shops are totally exempt from the anti-cash law. (1 hour 9 minutes)

ï¿½ As a part of what can only be described as a deliberate, gradual ï¿½rolling amnesty,ï¿½ the Washington regime has just announced that illegal aliens will now be permitted to work in the US. (1 hour 11 minutes)

Thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen to the Liberty Net every week ï¿½ somewhere near 3950 kHz, plus or minus the interference (lately, substantially above that frequency) ï¿½ every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time, and also via the Web (while N2SAG is transitioning to a new station, the N2IRJ page is the default live feed and chat room). You can also download the Liberty Net right here at http://3950.net and listen in your car, at work, or wherever you like. Check in on the air and join the excitement!

that rip tear and my radio said Elvis Presley has died.I repainted the

There are excellent pizza joints for all tastes around here. Cici's seems to be designed for OK pizzas for grade school kids. I won't eat them again.

A couple of local restaurants have super-expensive super-hot ovens which make a different kind of good pizza. But others have excellent pizzas with cheaper ovens. When I was young I liked pizzas with everything on them, now I am more minimalist. Not like my grandchildren though, who prefer either cheese or pepperoni.

My first experience with Pizza was at a Shakeys' in Mexico City in around 1962. I worked in pizza joints in College back when there were only a few styles of pizza joints.

Greatcoats are sufficient for spring and fall . Not in the winter .
Just ask the French about the campaign of 1812 .

If only they were transmitting in SSB mode. All they'd need then is 100 watts and a dipole and their signal would go a lot farther than it does now.

Perhaps it needed an oil change. 200 hours is equivalent to 16000

But something is broken inside, it would not even turn. Even with 5 months old car, it can run rough without oil change. Would a car dealer charge you $200 to look at a broken 5 months old car? I have never in my life heard of warranty service fee, not in the United States.

It sounds like your biggest problem is the dealer, not the generator.

The biggest problem is the manufacturer's warranty policies.

The dealer said according to manufacturer instructions by phone, who cited the warranty. I did not sign the warranty contract before the purchase. Now i disagree with the contract after receiving it, so I am entitled to full refund, with the purchase null and void.

Would a car dealer fix your car for free if you didn't change the engine's oil in time? 200 hours of use for a generator is similar for driving a car well over 16000 miles. I'm afraid your generator died because of lack of proper maintenance.

Yeah, I'm not sure that you've been told the truth. I see nothing about that in my warranty. Checked the warranty papers that came with my neighbor's Generac standby, too. Nothing like what you describe.

What I suspect is that the dealer called the manufacturer and came back with a different story than he was actually told.

I did not sign the warranty contract before the Most likely because the manufacturer refused to pay for his travel time (50 miles away). But that's not my problem that the dealer 10 miles away refused to service this model. At this point, i do not want to deal with this manufacturer or any of their dealers.

I changed oils after 10 hours and around 120 hours. Yes, it's almost time for another change and dealer tune-up (at 200 hours or 1 year).
They should come look at it with or without problem anyway. Charging $200 for the first service call is ridiculous. Seems like these generators are built for 200 hours per year. So, i should be entitled to at least 2 free service call. However, the two years warranty is not contingent on hours. If they insist on hours, why didn't they have a timer on board? Perhaps they do. They are watching us.

That may be. Trouble is, my tastes have changed over the decades and certainly the pizza industry is. I wouldn't be surprised if going back in a time machine quite a few of the restaurants I remember fondly would be found lacking.

ï¿½ Louisiana has introduced a bill banning the use of cash as payment

private exchanges like yard sales and flea markets. (37 minutes)

ï¿½ Louisianaï¿½s anti-cash bill will send you to jail for five years if you sell three used books or baby toys ï¿½ or anything ï¿½ at your yard sale without obeying the governmentï¿½s draconian commands. Detailed reporting requirements kick in if you sell more than one item per month. Strangely, though, pawn shops are totally exempt from the anti-cash law. (1 hour 9 minutes)

1) As I stated previously, I doubt seriously that the law can stand since cash is legal tender (per the federal government, and states cannot trump this) for all debts public and private.

2) Pawn shops would be instantly out of business if they couldn't transact in cash. Also, there are already stringent requirements for pawn shops to keep meticulous records of all purchases and sales, and to have those records open to law enforcement.

Very noble. Very comendable (sp). I don't believe a word of it.
You are telling me, given the choice, you would pick the more expensive item at the supermarket if you could be guaranteed it had been cultivated by workers who received a "fair day's pay?"

Maybe you're right. But I'm looking at the market in general. There's a lot more people buying cheap coffee, no matter where it came from than "fair share" coffee that guarantees the workers got a fair share of the profits.

If that makes me an "elite dickhead," I'm sorry. It also makes me the guy who sees where things go.

The product which has had some success is coffee - but you're right, most people don't shop for such unless they believe it tastes better.

How many union people shop Wal*Mart? My father-in-law certainly did.

Copy that! Half of the vehicles I see on the road have some idiot

Cell phones are great in an emergency, but otherwise they're a public not to mention all the microwave radiation everywhere.

And will grow another 2.3 billion by the year 2050 to reach 9.3 billion "miracles".

Only 2.3 billion in 40 years? It's gone up 4 billion in the LAST 40 years..
I would think that it would grow even faster in the next 40, given the logarithmic nature of the reproduction curve. It took thousands of years to make it to the first 3 billion, and only 35 or so to make the next 3 billion...

Interesting point you make. I would like to see the metrics being used for the projection, perhaps something we don't know about is being factored in. Conspiracy theorists have at it.

There is plenty of blame to go around. The Catholic Church and other religious zealots who oppose birth control, corrupt governments ever in search of oxen and cannon fodder, corporations lusting after an endless supply of cheap labor and stupid consumers who are easily manipulated into buying their never ending supply of junk. The list of entities who are benefiting from the insanity is long.

As with Europe, North America is experiencing the horrors of immigration as well. The Mexican invasion of the USA has been ongoing for 20 years and the utter disaster that has wrought is well chronicled.

The largest three groups of immigrants allowed into Canada each of the past 5 years are all brown (China, Pakistan and India) so look for the demographics of that nation to change drastically as well. Considering the prolific reproduction rates of those groups it won't take long for the "Great White North" to turn into the "Not So Great".

Looks like an unlucky 13 billion would be a more realistic population projection. Glad I won't be around to see it.

Don't know about you but i can hardly drive 80 mph all the time. I average something more like 30 mph, not much freeway driving. Even with freeways much of my driving is during "rush hour" and often not above 40 mph average.

It may be more fun, easier, and less costly to drag the local dealer into

As far as I am concerned, "law enforcement" is just as corrupt as some of the most corrupt segments of our society, and they are highly politicized to boot.

They are therefore among the very _last_ people who should be entrusted with _any_ of our personal financial information, which we should have an absolute right to keep secret.

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown.
Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2008
FCC rules and Sep 2009 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.

Phone line as SW antenna
Bill McFadden
billmc@agora.rdrop.com

Changes preceded by "|".

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area. Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the
| telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead. Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should
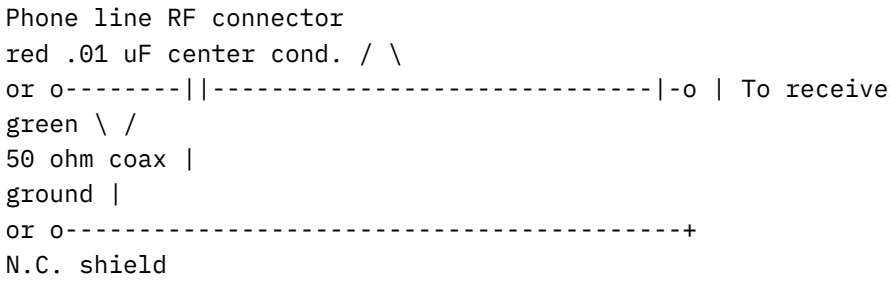
| be rated 250 volts or higher.



N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be

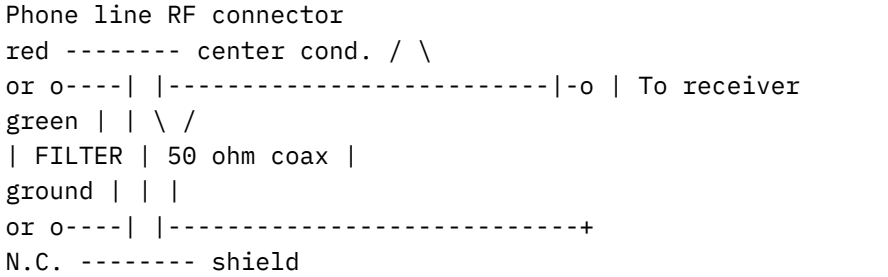
A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:



| RECOMMENDED FILTERS
| If you don't want to make your own filters, the following have good
| performance, are well-built and affordable:
| Model 400 BCB interference filter (3.5 MHz highpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#bcb

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#3
| (scroll down a bit to see the model 420)
| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):
| Model 182A beverage matching unit
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/reconly.html#Beverage Matching

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {

-------------+-----------+-----------------

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

PARTS SOURCE

Parts for the filters can be obtained from the following source:

Niall Ferguson on how America can avoid imminent collapse.

The Roman Empire didn't decline and fall sedately, as historians used to claim. It collapsed within a few decades in the early fifth century, tipped over the edge of chaos by barbarian invaders and internal divisions. In the space of a generation, the vast imperial metropolis

What all these collapsed powers have in common is that the complex

What we need to do is to delete the viruses that have crept into our system: the anticompetitive quasi monopolies that blight everything from banking to public education; the politically correct pseudosciences and soft subjects that deflect good students away from hard science; the lobbyists who subvert the rule of law for the sake of the special interests they represent—to say nothing of our crazily dysfunctional system of health care, our overleveraged personal finances, and our newfound unemployment ethic.

Small Claims is no fun. You can't do pre-trial and/or jury. I am still looking up the Federal, but should be similar to State Superior Court. Last i remember, it's $175 initial and $60 per motion. How much would it cost in Defend Council's billing hours?

It's really pro bono. Plantiff moves the court to force Defendant to disclose: Two years 400 hours or 100 cycles warranty, whichever comes first. The machine is programmed to self-destruct after warranty.

When it comes to BBQs, I can understand the need to replace it from time to time. I never spend big bux on one because I plan on replacing it every few years anyway. So I don't need no honkin' Binford-5000 deluxo-bbq to start with.

Who wants a fixed dirty old and rusting BBQ? Usually you end up having to spend $50 on a replacement carbourator for it in the spring (bugs like to get in it over winter). But when you can get a new one for $50 more (or less)?

My wife once bought a toaster when the cashier asked if she wanted a protection plan for it. She said something to the effect "Are you kidding me?!?! Why would I want the crummy old one fixed? I'd rather get a new [clean] one!"

I'm inclined to keep things more than my wife does. But if it smacks of needing cleaning or has "somebody else's germs on it" (used), then I've come to know where that is headed. $$

My wife bought me a golf shirt on sale shortly after I got my gieger counter from eBay (a couple of years ago). For kicks I measured it and found that it registered on avg a bit higher than the background levels around our place.

Many washes later, it has returned to background levels.

The level was not high enough to worry about, but was one of those things that make you go hmmmm... I think the shirt was made in Korea.

As the world get more and more crowded, we'll start killing each other more frequently and that will slow the population growth.

So I climbed on top of Markie. I was on all four, with my fat ass right in the fat fucker's face. I held back for as long as I could. Then, when I could hold back no more, I just strained as hard as I could. This let out a loud fart right in Markie's face. As fast as the fart slid out, along came a rush of liquid shit. Liquid shit, sprayed all over Markie's face. Some of it sprayed on the sheets and wall. There was shit every where! Not to mention Markie's beard. Markie face was caked with my warm shit!

Markie went right to work. He douched my asshole with his tongue. Markie then placed his lips against my hole, and sucked out even more shit.

By now Markie was stuffed with my shit. I could see he was thirsty. So I squatted over markie's face and filled his filthy mouth with my piss.

Satisfied, Markie fell asleep, and I'm here on the computer.

They are not making anyone sick. They use 900 MHz spread spectrum and only transmit when polled. The leakage from your Radar Range is a million times stronger.

I can't wait for mine; they give you near real time feedback on your energy use.

Sunspot 1339 / Solar Update:
Solar activity is moderate heading into Thursday with two M-Class events and countless C-Class flares within the past 24 hours. The largest of the M-Class flares was an M4.3 event at 22:01 UTC Wednesday evening around big Sunspot 1339. This flare did produce a small CME, but it was not Earth directed. The chances for Earth directed Coronal Mass Ejections (CMEs) will increase as 1339 rotates into a more geoeffective position. All of the other current Sunspot regions including Sunspot 1338 in the south have been quiet. It should be noted that 15 of the last solar flares recorded by SolarSoft have all been around Sunspot 1339.

Get some concrete blocks, lay them on the ground the way you want them.Lay something on the top of the blocks for a grill, slap some paint on the blocks.That BBQ thangy will last a lonnnnnng time.

I am going to Carl's sheet metal shop on Gallatin Street tomorrow

There is no choice ... without fair wages, we will soon look like ethopia. In case you haven't noticed, we have made some serious inroads to there already ... homeless, 1 out of every 6 on food stamps, printing worthless dollars backed by air, etc.

Sit back, this will only get better, or worse ... and I ain't bettin' on better!

As I have added various nonsense to this thread, I could add a few pizza recepies:

actually a part of my diet consists of pizza. But I make that myself, because that is cheaper, better and more convenient than walking to a pizzeria or getting them delivered.

Pizza:

dough is made in a bread making automat. Just bread without baking.
Depends on taste and demands, but usually I use some fresh grind hole grains.
The dough is cut into 7 pieces and sealed in plastic bags and frozen in (depending on the size of the automat and your pizza trays).

Sauce is concentrated tomatoes and peeled tomatoes, both from cans, olive oil, garlic, salt, chili. Mixed with a blender and stored in a jar in the fridge.

Cheese is pre-cut and stored in a container in the fridge, too.

I use a special mixture of salt and spices, that I produce in a blender and my grain mill (sea-salt, chili, rosmarin, basilicum..) .

To make a pizza I open a bag of dough, after melting it for a minute in the microwave, spread the dough on baking paper on a pizza baking plate.

Two spoonful of sauce and a half teaspoon of spices.
Than whatever you like (tuna, onions, broccoli ....)

Bake for twenty minutes at 240ï¿œC

That's it

Takes five minutes and prize is about one Euro (or dollar) a pizza.

Greetings

Thomas

So who decides what a "fair wage" actually is ?
The so-called minimum wage laws are based on the notion that there should be a "fair" minimum wage.
And yet minimum wage laws are a prime cause of joblessness at the low end of the scale of employees
And it also does nothing from stopping people paying less than that legally defined "minimum wage".

For four decades, Bill Niskanen worked for a tax-and-spending-limitation amendment to the Constitution. In January 1995, in only 125 words, he presented his proposed constitutional amendment to the House Budget Committee, “consistent with the crisp and majestic language of most of the Constitution.” Here is his amendment. After reading it, ask yourself how much better off the nation would be today if the body politic had passed what he proposed:

“Section 1. Congress may not increase the limit on the public debt of the United States without the approval of three-fifths of the members of each House.

“Section 2. Congress may not levy a new tax or increase the rate or base of an existing tax without the approval of three-fifths of the members of each House.

“Section 3. State and local governments must be compensated for the necessary additional costs of any new federal mandate specific to those governments. In the absence of such compensation, state and local governments need not implement such mandates.

“Section 4. Sections 1 through 3 of the Article shall be suspended in any fiscal year during which a declaration of war is in effect.”

I support a balanced budget amendment, but I cannot support Republican politicians who babble about the need for a balanced budget when they are in the minority, then proceed to run up record deficits once they win a majority in Congress.

A major problem with a balanced budget amendment is that it must contain an override clause for times of emergency. This ensures that every fiscal year will be declared to be in a state of emergency. A better solution might be to restore the proportional taxation system that existed before the 16th Amendment: When states were responsible for collecting the taxes used to pay for the federal budget, they had a vested interest in ensuring that the budget was as small as possible. The 16th Amendment disrupted the link between taxes paid and funding received, creating a free-for-all where each state tries to get more funding that its citizens pay in taxes. Combined with deficit spending with money borrowed from China, the result has been a total disaster.

I favor hand rolls myself ... grandfather taught me how to roll cigs

Well, I spend a lot of time on thinking about cooking. Since I live on a very low budget, what I get for my money should be the best possible.

A good way to enhance quality of life is to enhance cooking. The parameters of food quality are things like taste, 'healthiness', availability, durability and time and effort to prepare.
To enhance quality of food means, I want kind of fast-food, but better, cheaper, healthier and tastier.

This is what I try to develop. So I prepare all ingredients myself, even if that is time-consuming. But this gives me total control about the ingredients and where to by them for the best price.

This gives very good results and the food is better and much cheaper. The stuff you get in usual fast-food shops isn't particularly healthy and you don't know, where that particular e.g. cow came from.

The government would just have declared a war on the nation of St.
Kitts Island every year for one day then ignored the entire Amendment to spend the pork they wanted to spend.

True, you ask a slave owner what a fair wage is and the response is a lot different than a guy attempting to support a home, car, insurances, clothing, food, medical, retirement fund, etc.

Still, most would not have much difficulty telling which is the more correct opinion ... if push ever came to shove, they could always get a job and it would become immediately apparent, as to what a "fair wage" is!!!

I remember being shocked to find out some are in their 40s, 50s, even 60s and have never held a steady job ... well, unless unlicensed pharmacist, gangster, crook, politician, fraud artist, con man, etc. qualifies them ...

Actually, in 1969 I was working a Shell gas station, making ~$1.65 p/hr., I think that must have been a student wage, as I was 17 at the time -- gas was .25 - .30 a gal, loaf of bread .15 to .25 a loaf, pack of cigs .50 or less, six pack of beer ~.75, etc., rented a two bed apt at 75.00 a month, etc.

Now that everything is 10x as much, that would make that $1.65, 16.50 p/hr, and like I said, I believe that was a student wage!

That would get us near to fair ... and return us to near sanity as a society.

I can honestly say I do NOT believe I would be enjoying the retirement, homes, cars, security, etc. I enjoy now if not for those, back then, knowing what a fair wage is ... perhaps another method to recognize a fair wage is one which will support what it took in past times ... my past experience sure seems to indicate such ...

One thing I can say, and for damn sure, I would never have been able to own my own businesses, pay others wages (fair wages) to support families, etc. if those in business, back then, were as stupid and confused as to what a fair wage is, at they are now! And, if I had to compete against the slave labor being used in our prisons, the slave labor of china and other countries, I would doubt I would have been successful!

Most can look at that, job/employment history, and be able to figure it out immediately ... others, it seems, will be stuck in confusion or just trying to enslave others to work for poverty wages ... but I damn well know, I lived it, and it wasn't easy -- today, it just looks impossible to me ...

JS

Liberty Net: October 29, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/11/liberty-net-october-29-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THIS WEEKï¿½S AUTUMN SNOWSTORM killed electrical power and damaged trees in Hudson, New Hampshire, temporarily putting W1WCR, the Liberty Netï¿½s Net Control Station, off the air. But Marty, N2IRJ, stepped into the breach and kept the conversation flowing. This week also marked the reappearance of long-time net participants N2SAG, WB8RAV, and N8WGM via N2IRJï¿½s new phone patch system.

Here are some of the ideas discussed and debated this week on amateur radioï¿½s longest-running discussion (as opposed to traffic, or mere rag-chewing) net, on the air since 1974:

ï¿½ How does the addition of 50,000 ï¿½contractorsï¿½ ï¿½ a better word would be mercenaries, if not hit men ï¿½ constitute a ï¿½withdrawalï¿½ from Iraq? (43 minutes)

ï¿½ It is reported that J.P. Morgan alone holds $90 trillion in derivatives. Not only is this highly speculative form of ï¿½wealth created out of nothingï¿½ a time bomb waiting to go off, but it makes one wonder just why the banks didnï¿½t bail out themselves ï¿½ instead of ripping off the taxpayers. (45 minutes)

ï¿½ The Occupy Wall Street protests are being misrepresented and used by both the phony left (who use them to push their bogus ï¿½equalityï¿½ agenda) and the phony right (who use the least intelligible of the participants there to try and paint the entire group as a bunch of buffoons, which they are not). (1 hour 17 minutes)

ï¿½ Are Americans heading for a system that will make us a permanent underclass ï¿½ essentially sharecroppers in our former land, renting our very homes from new owners, largely aliens from the Middle East and China? (1 hour 27 minutes)

ï¿½ Why is the Washington regime spending billions of dollars building multiple killer drone bases in southern Ethiopia? (1 hour 31 minutes)

ï¿½ In some ways, citizens of Third World countries like Bangladesh ï¿½ though often dirt poor ï¿½ are better off than Americans and Europeans, because they are not anywhere near as enslaved to the bankers and their ï¿½debtï¿½ scam. (1 hour 45 minutes)

ï¿½ Is there a hidden purpose behind the Washington regimeï¿½s announced shutdown of all communications on November 9th? (1 hour 54 minutes)

ï¿½ In the banking scandal of the late 80s and early 90s, over 1200 bankers went to jail for their frauds on the public (though the biggest fraud of all ï¿½ the fractional reserve banking system itself ï¿½ was left untouched). But today, the bankers and their friends and co-ethnics in the media have such a grip on the political system that ï¿½ in the midst of a much greater crisis, and titanically larger frauds ï¿½ not a single one has gone to jail. (2 hours 22 minutes)

ï¿½ Some state governments are so sick of the Washington regimeï¿½s illegal acts that a new movement is brewing to deny funding to the beast on the Potomac. It would work like this: The state would inform its citizens that they should stop remitting federal income taxes to Washington, and instead send them to a state-run escrow fund, the directors of which would only release the funds for legal and constitutional purposes. (2 hours 39 minutes)

ï¿½ It is richly ironic that it took a Black woman to speak the truth that too few in the Occupy Wall Street protests are brave enough to express openly: that Zionist bankers are the problem. Naturally, the billionairesï¿½ media have now ruined her life and made her essentially unemployable. (3 hours 16 minutes)

Remember that you can find the Liberty Net in the upper part of 75 meters (lately it has been consistently higher than 3950 kHz) every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time ï¿½ join in, or listen live on the Internet via N2SAG or N2IRJ (temporarily, the N2SAG feed is down and the N2IRJ feed should be your default for live participation), or listen at your leisure via the mp3 files posted here at http://3950.net every week. Usually the new recording is posted early on Sunday. It will be visible at the top of the upper right column of every page of this site.

Once again, thanks to W1WCR for running this important and historic discussion net, and thanks also to N2IRJ for making these recordings available.

Well, you wouldn't hear any complaints, I have vomited after a night of drinking, with others watching ... then, in return, watched others vomit ... I have always found one grows tired of the viewing very quickly ... indeed, although I don't wish to be rash, I'd say once you seen one person vomit, you've pretty much seen 'em all ...

That must be due to a general migration of homeless to California.

http://www.channelregister.co.uk/2011/10/24/disk_drive_economics/

I dimly recall the time of the Kyoto earthquake in 1995 (forgive the dimly, I was more worried about being paid for a delivery made two days before the quake; we got the cash, just, a transfer on the last working day before it hit) and how the computer world was in uproar. Yes, death and destruction, appalling, but we found out that the only company in the world that made the glue (this is the dimly part, I think it was glue) to stick chips into their casings was at the bottom of the rubble.

Which is sort of but not quite where we are with the deadly Thai floods and the looming hard drive shortage.

Globalisation has made it possible to allocate work across the resources of the planet. We get our hard drives assembled by the Thai women making €200 a month in factories (as opposed to a possibly less pleasant career earning higher wages in the bars) but there's also these other effects as well. Economies of scale seem to be still large, which is why the number of drive manufacturers has gone, according to one estimate, from 20 to only 7 in the past few years. We've also got these clustering effects, where although those manufacturers might have multiple manufacturing locations, they tend to end up putting their factories close to those of their competitors.

How it all works out in any specific industry depends upon the specifics of that very industry: and that working out might well mean that globalisation does not lead to a larger number of suppliers nor even to greater reliability of supply. It, as so often, just depends. ®

Or, simply, if you can get someone to pay you 12 cents (about the cost of a kilowatt of electricity) an hour to watch TV, you will be able to buy a $1000.00 TV after 8333.333 hours of "work" (viewing the TV), or 1042.666 days at 8 hours of viewing a day ... but, since you old TV probably only drew about 1/3 of a KW of "juice", you can time those figures by about 3 ... which means, the TV will pay for itself in under 9 years!!!

I think my flat plasma screen is just fine ... I actually like the picture better than most LEDs I have seen.

Tonight, between 0030 and 0100 UTC, I noticed what seemed like tons of Asian stations coming through on 25 meters, though most were just slightly above the noise floor and plagued by flutter. Sri Lanka BC on 11905 came through strongly with subcontinental vocals and a female announcer.

4911. Canada outlaws hands-free ham radio

Not satisfied with just outlawing cb and ham radios which use handheld microphones, Canada has now outlawed hands-free ham radio by hams, and hands-free cb by cbers, yet still allows two-way radio use by taxi cab drivers, school-bus drivers, and businesses, police, etcetera even though all those people have MUCH LESS training in operating a two-way radio than hams do.

such as almost none, if not none, although it is usually none.

even low-class redneck cbers know more about how to properly use a radio then those people do.

yet the only ones allowed to use it are the ones with little or no training while the ones not allowed to use it ae the ones with the proper training in how to use it.

If the police had the proper training, then they would not be arresting people under phony radio laws which they claim is the actual law.

so that alone is proof the police do not have the proper training in howw to properly use a two-way radio since they do not even know the radio laws that they are trying to enforce, and therefore should also be prohibited from using a two-way mobile radio if the cbers and hams, which have the actual training as it is required to get their ham raadio license also are not allowed to operate their two-way radios mobile.

Not quite.
The Ontario law is requiring users of various devices to be "hands free" by 2012.
Basically, no mic in the hand.

It is not all of Canada, just Ontario.

Another dumb, unenforceable liberal law. How can they possible know whether you are using a hands free transceiver or not? You are driving along with both hands on the wheel and talking..... For all they know you are talking to a passenger, or singing along with the music on your car radio. And why would it be any more dangerous than doing either one of those two things?

I don't know if it's still that way, but back in the 70's, if you even wanted to have a car radio in your car, you had to apply for a special permit at the DMV, and they would levy a tax and stamp your registration with the approval.

Ach... I thought I had mentioned the state. It was Wyoming, and they certainly did have such a law. I remember the headache when I tried to register my first car there. I ended up using a pocket transistor radio on the dash rather than pay the extra money (I was only 18, and didn't have a

Edward Mandell House had this to say in a private meeting with Woodrow Wilson (President) [1913-1921]

“[Very] soon, every American will be required to register their biological property in a National system designed to keep track of the people and that will operate under the ancient system of pledging. By such methodology, we can compel people to submit to our agenda, which will affect our security as a chargeback for our fiat paper currency. Every American will be forced to register or suffer not being able to work and earn a living. They will be our chattel, and we will hold the security interest over them forever, by operation of the law merchant under the scheme of secured transactions. Americans, by unknowingly or unwittingly delivering the bills of lading to us will be rendered bankrupt and insolvent, forever to remain economic slaves through taxation, secured by their pledges. They will be stripped of their rights and given a commercial value designed to make us a profit and they will be non the wiser, for not one man in a million could ever figure our plans and, if by accident one or two would figure it out, we have in our arsenal plausible deniability. After all, this is the only logical way to fund government, by floating liens and debt to the registrants in the form of benefits and privileges. This will inevitably reap to us huge profits beyond our wildest expectations and leave every American a contributor or to this fraud which we will call “Social Insurance.” Without realizing it, every American will insure us for any loss we may incur and in this manner; every American will unknowingly be our servant, however begrudgingly. The people will become helpless and without any hope for their redemption and, we will employ the high office of the President of our dummy corporation to foment this plot against America.”

And, as always, don't leave your children unattended anywhere in Holland, Michigan. Many, many undesirable backwater types live there.

They have at least one dufus who once claimed to have been the Supreme Commander of a gay paramilitary sauna club and fantasized about 'blowing away' Canada, and who knows, there may be many more dufi there.

Sounds more like a cash strapped city law than a state law.

There was an unwritten "law" that said red cars belonged to the fire dept.

In 1912 Edward Mandell House anonymously published the futuristic political novel Philip Dru: Administrator: a Story of Tomorrow, 1920-1935. I've not read it but the plot is the protagonist leads the democratic western U.S. in a civil war against the plutocratic East and becomes the dictator of America.
Self described "rodeo clown" Glen Beck often cites the book as "proof" of whatever conspiracy he is peddling to increase his ratings and bank account. And of course the lemmings lap it up.

Yeah.... That makes a lot of sense. Pay a tax for the privelege of killing yourself or someone else in a car accident.... but that should tell you what its all about.. Money. If the government sees some way to get some extra money from any of its citizens, they'll jump on it. They don't need any excuse. They just collect money for the same reason Hillary climbed Everest.... "Just because its there".

I can believe it. There have been many dumb laws passed. Some of them have been thrown out by the higher courts, either 'state or federal. Like the guy back in the 60's who wanted to start a cable TV business in southern California. Every movie theatre had a petition in their lobbys to prevent him from doing it. and hunderwds of thousands of movie goers signed it. Not only that, but the stupid
California voters voted for it! Of course, the California Supreme Court threw it out. (His cable business didn't take away anyone's rights. If he came to your door and asked you if you wanted him to deliver a cable signal to your house, all you had to do was say, "No", and slam the door in his face. Ande, if your neighbor had one delivered to his living room, You wouldn't even know it, so it wouldn't hurt you in the least) But millions of California voters pulled the lever on "no" for that poor guy, and it cost him a bundle to fight it to the state supreme court..... Go figure.....
People haven't a clue as to what the Constitution is all about. And by, "people" I also mean our legislaters....

Marvyn Richmond, 49, was so engrossed in a conversation with his mother that he failed to notice traffic ahead of him had come to a standstill, and ploughed into the back of the queue, killing Michael Buston, a passenger in a van.

Relatives of Mr Buston and road safety charities called for an outright ban on making phone calls whilst driving, which makes drivers four times more likely to have an accident, even if they are using a hands-free kit.

Mr Buston's father-in-law, Peter Long, whose son was badly hurt in the crash in March last year, said: "The use of hands-free phones should be stopped. Whether it's hands-free or not, it's still a distraction to any driver.

"What happened was totally avoidable. At the end of the day this man has ruined many lives, all because he was using his mobile while driving."

Richmond was jailed for four and a half years after being convicted at Lincoln Crown Court of causing death by dangerous driving.

Q. What are the sources of driver distraction?

A. There are many distractions in everyday driving. Events and activities inside and outside the vehicle can cause driver distraction. Many of these have been recorded in the Crashworthiness Data System maintained by the U.S. National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) and include:

Something taking place alongside the roadway
An unexpected noise
Operating the radio, CD, or cassette player
Adjusting the climate or operational controls
Using other devices in the vehicle (navigational instruments, business tools, cellular telephones)
Eating, drinking and smoking
Other distractions while driving include personal grooming, conversations with passengers, disciplining or tending to children, reading or writing.

Q. What are the consequences of driving while distracted?

A. Distracted drivers react more slowly to sudden traffic conditions or events, such as a car stopping to make a turn, or pulling out from a side road. They fail more often to recognize potential hazards such as pedestrians, bicycles or debris in the road. They decrease their "margin of safety" leading them to take risks that they might not otherwise take, such as turning left in front of oncoming traffic.

When a driver's attention is drawn away from the road and the surrounding environment, the result could be a delayed reaction to a hazard, or possibly a failure to detect it at all. All of these are common factors associated with vehicle crashes. Driver focus is critical to anticipating and avoiding collisions.

One of the earlier studies on distracted driving, released by Transport Canada's Ergonomics Division, 'The Impact of Cognitive Distraction on Driver Visual Behaviour and Vehicle Control' in February 2002 (Harbluk and Noy) found that performing a demanding cognitive task while driving produced changes in the drivers' visual behaviour, vehicle control (as indicated by braking behaviour), and subjective assessments of workload, safety, and distraction.

A more recent study by the U.S. National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) released in April 2006 concluded that driver age, experience, daytime sleepiness ratings and personality can make significant differences in a driver's involvement in crashes and near-crashes due to distractions.

Back to top

Q. How many collisions are caused by distracted drivers?

A. Driver distraction is cited as one of the most common contributors to traffic crashes but the numbers vary depending on the study. According to a 2006 study published by the U.S. National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) the various forms of driver distraction are estimated to contribute in 8 out of every 10 crashes (NHTSA, April 2006). This figure translates into almost 4 million crashes per year. Estimates of a similar magnitude have been cited in other reports (NHTSA, 1997, Treat et al. 1979).

Actually, social security is nothing more than a national (of the people, by the people and for the people) retirement fund ... the problem is that crooks, our public servants, have stolen the funds and used them for other purposes, even to the point of throwing this retirement fund into the general fund ...

The fix is simply to have government replace the funds they have stolen
... however, since we are now bankrupt and printing worthless money backed by nothing but printing presses, this would be impossible ...

However, this same problem, bankruptcy is at the root of all our economic problems ... not just social security ... the criminals have stolen all the wealth from the system, replacing it all with green paper (unless one holds precious metals or other real property.)

At some point in the near future, this is going to become painfully apparent ... to some, it already is.

That statement is simply your declaration that you consider Americans to be too stupid to recognize that they are slaves. Since, a slave generally has his basic needs met adequately. A slave is well fed, starving slaves don't produce well to make their masters a profit. Slaves are generally provided adequate housing, medical and clothes -- a sick, tired, ill, worn out, deprived slave is, again, generally a poor producer and cannot make his masters the profit they desire ... to make a long story short, if you are working at minimum wage, or even double, you are already a slave ... giving that a little thought will make it quite obvious, to those possessing sufficient gray matter.

We must have funny ideas about the word "fair". I suppose the Koch brothers believe it is fair to inherit enough money to buy the U.S. government.

I am very fortunate to be born in a wealthy country - but that isn't because I deserved to be born here, and that it is unfair for others to come here.

Now, there are reasons to stop them from coming - but "fair" isn't one of those reasons.

Rep. Ron Paul (R-TX) says President Obama's continued use of the executive order "brings the modern presidency dangerously close to an elective dictatorship."

"That is arrogant," Paul said of Obama frequently using the executive order function as of late. "It is flaunting the Constitution and the whole principle of how we’re supposed to operate. The idea they can just do this and take over the legislative function and brag about it -- and Congress does nothing and the courts do nothing about it, it's very, very bad."

"He's dictatorial, is what he is," Rep. Paul said before the end of the interview.

And as usual not one bankster goes to jail. Just write a check and move on - nothing to see here. When was the last time a nabbed bank robber just paid a fine from the loot he stole and did no prison time?

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) -- Wells Fargo & Co. said Tuesday it has agreed to pay at least $37 million in a lawsuit which alleges several banks rigged bidding competitions to win business from state and local governments.

The lawsuit alleges several banks rigged the process and deprived governments of a true competitive process that would produce the best returns on their investments.

It alleges many top investment banks conspired to rig the bidding process, "sharing their illegal gains through kickbacks to one another, and making other secret, undisclosed arrangements."

Other banks have reached agreements to settle with some of the parties in the case.

In July JPMorgan Chase & Co. agreed to pay $211 million. J.P. Morgan Securities LLC made at least 93 secret deals with companies that handled the bidding processes in 31 states, the Justice Department and Securities and Exchange Commission said. Those deals allowed the bank to peek at competitors' offers.

Bank of America and UBS also have agreed to settlements. Bank of America Corp. agreed in December 2010 to pay more than $137 million. UBS AG agreed in May to pay more than $160 million.

Wells Fargo shares rose 84 cents, or 3.3 percent, to $26.26 in early afternoon trading. They're off 15 percent since the beginning of the year and have traded as high as $34.25 in the past 52 weeks.

Now when did they do that ???
I would suspect that Soros did more to "buy the country" than the Koch brothers ever did.

Fair is protecting this country from an invasion that will destroy it by the time you kids and grandkids grow up..
But then, you are clueless about the word fair.
Maybe you should use the word moral Because often what is moral is not fair..
But then life in general is not fair...

Conduct Unbecoming Part I

Over the next two years, however, my experiences in the Clinton White House turned my gratitude and awe into shock, revulsion, and sorrow as I experienced the cavalier and self-serving way Clinton went about the business of running our country. I wrote my first book, Dereliction of Duty, documenting our former President's contempt for the military, his indifference to important issues except insofar as they served his own political or personal purposes, and his failure to accept his responsibilities as our commander-in-chief. Indeed, it is my sincere belief that the dereliction of duty and negligence of Bill Clinton paved the way for the tragic events and deaths of September 11, 2001.

Obama's Secret Link to Hamas, Part II

At the time I left my position in the Clinton White House I certainly couldn't have imagined we'd elect anyone more inept than Bill Clinton. Nor could I have predicted that just seven years after we'd been attacked and gone to war, we'd elect the most radical left-wing president in our nation's history. Few seem to have noticed, until recently, that Barack Obama is inclined to dispense with the key precepts our forefathers valued: a robust defense of American sovereignty and our national interest for one; limited government for another; fiscal prudence for a third.

It is the nature of the beast, drug addicts who are sick and desperate will go to any lengths to obtain their drugs -- this is the real danger to us -- this is what is bankrupting us, keeping him in prison for life at 40,000+ per year and the woman for 25 years at 40,000 per year.

Like prohibition was necessary for alcohol, it is now a screaming fact we must legalize drugs. The drugs themselves can be processed for pennies a day to keep their habits fed -- as opposed to the carnage and cost of the grief these laws are inflicting on society.

Enough is enough ... I get the sense that illegal drugs are at the root of most crimes and the reason for most costs to us taxpayers -- illegal drugs allow not only the street criminals to steal our wallets, but our public servants are taking anything left over!

4981. Building a new shortwave tube radio

Newsgroup: rec.radio.shortwave

Message-ID: <7a650201-cba6-46da-aac8-eb6e4dddb70c@p2g2000vbj.googlegroups.com>

With the survivalist market as well as the DIYers who would build a kit I have given thought to the idea of building a new tube shortwave receiver as a usable, practical set.

That means no regens, no DC bullshit, and no plug in coils. It must have production grade RF and IF coils, a bandswitch, and require alignment. If sold as a kit the builder will need a RF generator and a scope (or a spec an or CSM with a track gen).

It should use off the shelf parts even if those shelves are bare, as it is better to copy an existing item than design from scratch. I would clone the Eddystone dial mechanism and the bandswitch and coils from some Hallicrafters or Hammarlund set, they could be sold as desperately needed replacement spares for the old sets too. I would use a seeing eye tube mounted in a hole in the dial as opposed to a meter movement, again, getting a run of new tubes made is possible if you are buying several thousand. There are some surplus that could be used if really needed too.

I would use a separate power supply and speaker for several reasons.

I would have the radio take in B+ and heater voltage and put out 600 ohm +4 audio. A regular supply could be used at home or car battery and a switchmode brick for B+. A headphone jack would be supplied off this tube.

The set should cover 500 kHz to 30 MHz, AM, SSB and CW, with a product detector of course. A 455 kHz IF is needed so as to use common mechanical or crystal filters, which are optional. There should also be a 455 kHz IF out for an external synchronous detector.

Any other comments?

My guess is that the cost you would have to charge to recoup the time and effort you put together in coming up with such a design would end up making such a set much more expensive than just going to a ham fest, buying a Hammarlund in good shape, and fixing it up. Or even paying someone else to fix it up.

I already have a R-390, two Hammarlunds and a Racal....I wanted to manufacture something. Or at least think about it.

Most people who are into radio might think you are irrational, because good short wave reception with tubes has been done by major manufacturers of the past rather better than you can ever imagine to achieve, unless you have far greater intelligence than their leading chief designers wo passed lots of exams and universities and had passed the test of being jolly good fellows in the real world of private enterprise employment and marketing activities with the now mentioned Racal, and Hammlund, Hallicrafters et all, just to name a few.

Regenerative boost I can understand, but "DC bullshit" Such a term does not appear in any electronic books written prior to 1960 when tubed radio was regarded as the best mature technology for SW reception.

You must be dreamin'. Its not clear at all what you want. Do you wanna make a radio from scratch, or do ya wanna buy a kit made by some sucker who is likely to find he'll sell 2 kits over 10 years, and get a lousy price from YOU?

If ya wanna build just ONE HF receiver for you only, then there's plenty of old books on making radios, just follow what you read in the books, de-bug all what you build, as all the manufacturers have done before you.
What happens first though? Do you die in ten years leaving behind a mess to clean up and no working radio, or you get a working radio in 3 months, fairly well perfected, and live for 9 years and 9 mths to enjoy it?

Ah, just WHO is going to clone anything from the past and make any money?

Your dreamin again. Its totally stupid to expect anyone might sell thousands of NEW made copies of 1960 SW radios sets without conducting a thorough market feasibility study. The COMPETION for what you propose now has become so overwhelming that nobody in their right mind would consider having say 10,000 new 6BA6, 6BE6 etc manufactured for a production run of thousands of SW sets.

Before asking us silly questions, have you :-
1. Learnt all about SW tube radio, 2. Drawn up a probable, or provisional parts list, 3. spent weeks chasing quotes for parts exactly as yo specifiy, 4, Generally put in a whole lot of work so far without relying on any of us, who, IMHO, will conclude you are on a goose chase.

> I would use a separate power supply and speaker for several reasons.

Well of course, but you'll die when you work out the cost of production for your project is 100 times what people now pay for SW reception with a whole pile of features you'll probably not want to include.

All those features have already been well sorted out by old makers.

But there was a magazine called Electronics Australia which has now been swallowed up by 'Silicon Chip' but they have a CD with the old magazines monthly output from 1939 to 1965.
http://shop.siliconchip.com.au/radio-tv-and-hobbies-april-1939-to-march-1965-1.html

Perhaps within that magazine you'll find full articles about building good SW radios with tubes which were second to none.

Hardly any of the parts used are now available, but hey, yo issa dreamer, and you'll just dream them all up.

Reality is that you might spend years building such a set, at a glacial rate of 1 tube stage per 3 months. My bet is that of the maybe 200 blokes who attempted to build the radios which are so well described in the magazine, maybe 10 finished a set to a respectable standard. Magazines became viable, because dreamers bought them. Mostly do-little nerds as I recall. What's so rivettingly interesting about SW reception? What form of media entertainament is worth listening to on SW? What is available on SW which ain't available elsewhere, apart from a pile of noise, poor audio, whistles, fade outs, and old amateur blokes droning on and on about their latest hospital operations? New York police maybe?

I regularly restore old radios. Last job was a 1947 Healing floor standing 5 band AM radio for the fashionable Bling-Blang generation of 1947, ie, my parents generation. It has a 6J8 mixer plus 6U7 IF, and is chockoblock with coils and special wafer switches but it does give remarkably good reception of Radio America of China Calling even in daytime, with a long wire antenna taken out to a nearby tree. Anyway, I put in about 130 hours fixin up the old banger, and the one section I didn't alter at all was the 3 band SW section. Not much alignment was needed to maximise performance. Local MW was changed to ferrite rod antenna replacing the horrible high impedance RF input tranny which worked fine before the present which is riddled with hum imposing itself on many incoming signals in the electro static portion of the electromagnetic waves. The ferrite rod reacts to the magnetic part of the incoming wave which is not affected by compact fluorescent lamps et all.

But now we have local Digital Radio Broadcasting now all based on frequencies up around 250Mhz. The local Australian Broadcasting Commission, or ABC, has just begun trials here for broadcasting of all they have on MW, 2 stations, and all they have on FM, another 2 stations, on digital. Don't ask me how DAB works. I can't find any schematics of concise explanations.

So, listeners who have loved their old tubed radio set because it carried the MW local stations now don't need to use their tubed set, and can access the old AM station program noise free and with full audio BW with hi-fi specs from their tiny little box sets for DAB.

Now sometimes ppl with radios capable of SW might try surfing the bands, but now DAB is here ppl won't be able to surf these SW bands, but then who ever did ?

There were 101 different ideas put forward for providing a decent tubed SW radio which never saw commercial development and production, such as the early synchrodyne. The superhet was deemed to be the best. Racal had 3 mixers, and was remarkably stable for an old banger but now with digtally generated oscillator F and all that chipery stuff and computer controlled stuff, stablity is far better now. Wanna copy a Yeasu?

If I wanted to build a 6 band SW radio now I think I might have 6 j-fet RF amp stages well controlled by AVC, then 6 j-fets for oscillators, and thus not need a special made bandswitch, except some generic easy to buy wafer switch from Farnells with 6 positions. Mixer could be one of many options, maybe more than one, to minimise switching of the IF output. With such cheap small devices with high gm and low noise, the cost is far less than a complex switch and just two tubes to work on all bands. But all this is so easy to say, and such things are easier said than done, and succes relies on YOU. And there are very few ppl here who are heavily into farnarkling with HF radios, so there are not many brains here to be picked, or if you do try, you'll probably get 101 suggestions all requiring maybe years to perfect and after that you still can't equal the best old sets.
I heard about a bloke who built a CD player using just generic opamps. It took so long......

Patrick, I too was going to write something like that, but you did far better than I could.

The point that was buried in his original posting was that he is building an "EMP-PROOF" radio to sell to the survivalist market.

Personally I think it is a fools errand, you can't build a modern radio similar to the high performing ones of the past at a cost anyone will pay, since in comparison, you can buy any one of the many old radios that will do, pay a professional to refurbish and align it, and buy several lifetimes worth of spare parts for far less.

Not only that but radio collecting is a well known and liked hobby, nobody is going to take a second look at that old transoceanic on your shelf, but many would flip out seeing any firearm.

If you are paranoid, you an even find stores in many places where you can buy a refurbished radio for cash and leave a fake name and address.

I can't imagine that any rational survivalist would waste power running tubed electronics. I guess you could hype the EMP issue, but even that can be handled better with SS.

Anyone who'd use the old Halli bandswitch has never had to fix a Halli bandswitch.

The trouble with valve radios is they use lots of electricity.

SS sets are cheap and easily obtainable.

Even a Happy Harry Home-owner type can cheaply build a small Faraday cage to keep one in, if anticipating an EMP.

Because cash transactions are coming under the scrutiny of authority, today. Louisiana just became the most recent state to require identity of purchaser in a cash transaction or a ban on the cash transaction. Even a used purchase from a flea market or a garage sale.

Other states are currently debating this provision.

Certainly worth thinking about.

Maybe worth doing. But consider:

Tubes are getting harder to come buy. Not that they can't be had.
And after an EMP, they're likely to be as available as working SS devices. But there are inherent issues with Tubes. One is that they use a LOT of precious energy, that in a survival mode situation is best conserved for other applications, or longer listening. Another is that voltages are much higher than those that can be recovered after or during a crisis with ease. Low voltage, low current devices are going to be more desirable when energy is in short supply.

But, more importantly, tube receivers aren't necessarily less prone to damage by EMP than SS receivers. In fact, there is empirical evidence to suggest that SS receivers can be made to survive an EMP where a tube receiver will not.

Your best options, then, would include building a reasonably high performance receiver with readily available common parts, and take measures, such as a Faraday cage, and effective grounding/input protection measures, to render your station if not immune, then more resistant to stray or induced hostile voltages.

Now, you have a practical, and manufacturable, product.

But since you never specify why it should use tubes, you sound like a kook.

I assume you are thinking tubes so they won't be damaged by EMP. But you have to consider if that's a real reality, or some fantasy. There are loads of reasons why someone might want to be prepared, without coming close to a nuclear blast. But those other reasons might much rather have a battery operated radio rather than the high current drain of tubes.

I can stockpile batteries for a solid state shortwave receiver, I can keep some larger batteries on hand as an external supply, I could run a low current receiver off a solar panel, there are lots of options. But once you start drawing current to heat those tube filaments, you are really stuck. Yes, you can use an inverter off a car battery, but then have to keep charging the battery. Note that in the old days, running tube equipment in the car, you mostly had the car running, so there was current coming from the alternator, rather than just relying on the battery.

Why? You really havent' specified what you want, you are then jumping into fine details. For emergencies, it may be a really useful choice. But you are being wishy washy in your criteria, so who knows. A regen is lousy for regular reception at this point in time.

No, you don't want a direct conversion receiver, since those are best for CW and SSB, not great for straight AM (which presumably is your target). But once can get pretty fancy with DC receivers, even including proper reception of AM. It will get more complicated, but proper design requires looking at multiple possibilities, and since every design will be a tradeoff, you need to take off your blinders and look at possibilities before deciding something is more suitable.

Note that the regen is "direct conversion", at least once you kick it into oscillation. And there were various designs of "direct conversion" in the earlier days of radio, though not called "direct conversion". Even in 1961, there was a tube based direct conversion receiver in QST.

The early wave of direct conversion solid state receivers often compromised. They'd be direct conversion on one band (or maybe not at all) and then a converter ahead of it, which made it a superheterodyne receiver, albeit with no IF selectivity. There are some points in that favor.

Indeed, many a good receiver was made with a single conversion receiver tuning a fixed band, and then converters ahead of it (lots of homebrew receivers, but also classics like the Collins receivers). That meant the local oscillator could run at a low and fixed frequency, rather than a wide segment (traditional single conversion to 455KHz receivers had about a 2:1 tuning range on each band), so you can have good calibration, and good tuning, the oscillator running at a low frequency and not needing to be switched in frequency from band to band (problems in that alone). The problem was that it meant a crystal for every segment you wanted to tune (got around initially by choosing which segments, nobody says you have to have all 30Mhz of the shortwave band), though later synthesizers fixed that. Of course, there was also the Wadley loop that sort of synthesized the first oscillator, at the cost of an extra mixer and complicated circuitry.

For that matter, one popular method of getting a shortwaver receiver was to get a car radio (they often had better selectivity, and better image rejection along with better sensitivity, plus good tuning) and put a converter or converters ahead of it, getting double conversion. Leave the bulk of the construction to the car radio manufacturers and just build the converter, a relatively simple task. This is now harder if you can't find a car radio with analog tuning, since the 10KHz steps of a synthesized car radio is not the 5KHz that shortwave broadcasters use (and even 5KHz is too wide for the ham bands).

Note also that in the thirties there were the "supergainers", regen receivers with converters ahead of them (or looked at differently, superhets with regen receivers as the IF), a fusion that provided some advantages. Even in the solid state era you'd see those in the ham magazines, sometimes people even putting crystal filters before the regen detector.

No plug in coils? Then again you haven't stated your prime criteria (no plug in coils in not criteria, it's the result of some criteria you haven't specified. In the old days, the bandswitch often was a key problem in a multiband radio. It had to switch LC circuits at increasingly high frequencies. The switch often got in the way, and physical layout was determined by the bandswitch (though some companies bult the bandswitch for the receiver, so the layout could be better). Coils have a simplicity, though of course that doesn't include fast bandswitching. The HRO used plug in coils right up till the point of solid state, and many thought that line was a great receiver. All those recievers with converters ahead of them meant one could plug in a converter per band, rather than switch LC circuits. More expensive, but if you use transistors the solid state devices dont' add much to the cost, unlike tubes that were costly and bulky.

Your fantasy designing has overlooked the home builder's need to align the receiver. Fixated on the way things used to be, you havent' considered that if you spend the money differently, it may make user alignment simpler.

YOu want to construct a fifty year old receiver. There are virtually no off the shelf parts left for those. There aren't shelfs or local radio stores to sell those parts.

You havne't made the tradeoff between old and new. That crummy Eton hand held shortwave receiver I got at a garage sale in September for 2.00 is no better than the junk solid state Hallicrafters S-120A receiver I spent $80 for in the summer of 1971. But, it uses an IC to provide a frequency counter, which means one can actually have good frequency readout, without all kinds of expensive dials and calibration. The IC is dirt cheap, the Eddystone dial if it was still being made today would be terribly expensive. The dial seems simpler, but this is a case of complication making the overall design far simpler. Oddly, that hand held Eton radio does take more advantage of having a frequency counter on board, they break up the tuning into smaller segments (since they don't have to calibrate a dial, or provide space for a whole bunch of bands, why not?) which means the simple tuning pot is not too obnoxious.

A solid state receiver would run off a battery, and the built in supply wouldn't be a burden when unused. If you're really stuck with tubes, why not get original, wind your own transformer, then have the AC coming from the wall turned into DC and an oscillator that feeds the transformer. Running at a higher frequency, the transformer can be smaller. But, done right, you can have another oscillator that runs off 12vdc, and that feeds a diffeent winding of the transformer, so you've got your dual mode power supply without making two supplies. You haven't throught this through, you haven't done nearly enough wide thinking. You are just trying to duplicate the past, without any great reason for it.

Your bias is there. For at least fifty years one could get good selectivity in the shortwave frequencies, initially down around 2Mhz but then 9MHz became kind of standard. Even tube receivers were built with such "high" IFs. Right away you get rid of the problem of image rejection, with such a high IF the front end selectivity is lessened (especially for the higher bands). Alignment is simplified, indeed a single conversion receiver with a 9Mhz IF no longer has to gang the local oscillator tuning with the front end tuning, there's no longer a problem of an image 910KHz away (I've seen reviews for single conversion 455KHz low end receivers from the old days, I remember one said "we couldnt' tell which was the image and which was the real signal, they were of equal strength"). You lose some segment around the IF frequency, but chosen properly you won't miss much. Of course, 9MHz IF filters are more expensive than 455KHz ceramic filters (which is what many receivers use), which can then be a problem if you want multiple bandwidths. One way to get around that is to go with a high IF and then a low IF, though not without tradeoffs. Note that mechanical filters are not inexpensive, that is only the case if one finds one on the used or surplus market. Crystal filters at 455KHz were commonly single crystals, a good peak but not so great skirt selectivity, and they'd provide multiple bandwidths by loading the crystal down. One might as well go with a higher IF and make ladder crystal filters, one for SSB and another for AM.

Or put a phasing system at 9MHz, with a relatively wide (and cheap) crystal filter ahead of it (10.7MHz may then be better, it's not a common frequency for narrow bandwidth filters but is common for narrow FM bandwidth filters). A good phasing system will knock out the unwanted sideband, and audio selectivity will be effective. Done properly, it can be synchronized to the incoming signal for AM reception.

Or use a high IF and then 455KHz. This has an advantage that you can add some tuning to the second conversion oscillator, making it fine tuning. Some portable shortwave receivers used this scheme before the move to higher first IFs. Indeed, with a synthesized oscillator (well not if you still want tubes), broad steps make it simpler to design and build, and having a fine tuning on the second conversion oscillator then fills in between steps.

Go back and figure out your design criteria. Who will want this? What's the point? A practical receiver for now is different from the nostalgia of the old days. Simple to build may mean a simple receiver, or it may mean adding complication in order for the end builder to have little problem assemblying it or aligning it. Adding extra stages may add cost, but may some other point simpler.

And don't assume single conversion to 455KHz receivers were the ultimate in design. They weren't, they were tradeoffs and some got around problems by making them more complicated, others lived with the problems.

It's for the benefit of the children.

Many contagious diseases are spread by filthy money and the Brothels just aren't sterilizing the bills like they used to. The Cocaine pushers are far better in this respect, as they get their clients to ingest any product left on the money.

Only anti-American terrorists use cash for purchases.

Next week I will be proposing a new 'Sterility' law which will require all canned good to be opened for examination before being placed on the store shelves.

Then, the mandatory installation nation wide of surveillance cameras in the bathrooms of the Elderly. They fall a lot and the cameras would assure a swift response by medical teams.

SAFETY is paramount.

Not only that, but I bet if you investigate and follow this story, NOT ONE DIE WILL GO BACK TO THE PEOPLE IT WAS STOLEN FROM!

Indeed, the other set of crooks are simply stealing from the original crooks, you know that other set of crooks -- they are our public

Ron Paul is absolutely correct; whenever the government of the people, by the people and for the people is not the driving and defining force of American Constitutional Law and our governments actions and behaviors, we simply have a bunch of criminals running government,

Yeah, why would anyone build a survival set whose filaments would burn much more power than a VERY high end transistor set? You plan on hauling around sq yards of solar cells to power that rig?

Binaries are fine ... anyone attempting to make the sending/receiving of them are the criminals ... if there is a dispute on the material being copyrighted, legal actions may have to be taken, when they are caught.

Oh, I didn't think of that. If WW3 breaks out, all arses will have departed, because on hearing about the beginning of WW3 off the Internet, everyone will bend down to kiss their arse goodbye, and arses will depart, bye-bye, and no need for toilets or food any more.

But "survivalist" resonated exuberantly in my mind because I'm 64, and the foppish Beatles used to sing a song "will ya still lerve me when I'm 64?". I'm 64. I know the answer, forbidden to be sung about by anyone, and its NO, no one at all will lerve ya when your'e 64, so that means all that's left is survival against a rotten horrible marauding mob of young upstarts hell bent on invading and pillaging and burying alive all that my father's generation established, and they all fuck a lot while I'm not allowed to 'av one, well, not for free, and mean while this horrible lot are decimating the remaining species across the planet, and all trying to build absurdly large mansionettes, while all sending huge quantites of CO2 skywards which will ruin the weather, and exacerbate their self generated future difficulties.

One "survivavlist" I know had two sound systems I serviced, a Quad-II with early Whardale LS, and a Leak system. Once inside the door of his house, one entered the lounge-room, and it was all exactly as it was in 1955, with a 1956 newspaper on the coffee table screaming headlines
"SUEZ BOMBED". 1956 was a time when the rot of modernity really got a toe past the front door of most ppl, and rock and roll was seen as just as bad as WW3.

So, this survivalist guy just saw no reason to mentally proceed past 1956. He worked his way up to being chief conserverator at the Australian Sound and Film Archives where much of the audio-visual media of the past ends up to be converted to digital files for future generations to enjoy, and for old blokes to gloat over.

I humbly seek approval and aknowledgement that I know what "survivalist" means, and I can also back up mu claim because I know now that the older I get, the betta I was, and I have the recently created medical and dental records to prove it.

Professionals who know about old Racals and so on are just about all dead now.
But to copy a Racal so you could provide a kit would be financial suicide.

Well, lotsa Mr Para Noids getting around on the Internet; they all broadcast their ideas, using a false nickname, and wouldn't dare use the name given to them by their parents.

So paranoidism isn't any big deal.

Bet ya don't go out to night clubs at 2AM any more to hunt for hot crumpet. Too many arsoles will happily mug you. Paranoidism prevents you wandering like a lost old dog than the young bitches will laugh at. Survivalism has you staying at home.

But bicycles are safe during the day.

How about that. I guess the Taxation and Police authorities might like to know how and where ppl spend their cash.

But I heard that since 911, hundreds of huge and mainly hidden buildings housing about 2 million workers across the USA have been quietly built and operate to filter all email traffic and phone traffic to detect terrorists and possibly anyone other selectable target, like people trading in OLD STUFF like old radios which consume the same amount of electricity to run an air con unit, or 500 i-pods.
These spying centers suck in digital data like huge vacuum cleaners, then apply a filter for key words. One wonders if such centers could detect the next intended school shooting or Oklahoma Bombing.
The so called BLACK ECONOMY, ie, the flow of cash which can't be traced and hence isn't taxed is one of the big reasons to try to outlaw cash, and thus have everyone pay the transaction cost to a 3rd party by means of the credit card. But here in Oz, cash is still widely used, and everyone I know does not need to be told to bring cash when paying me peanut wages for radio repairs. I explain to ppl that average wages are 60 grand a year now, ie, $1,300 a week for the 46 weeks out of 52 ppl actually work, ie, $32.50c per hour of 40 hrs a week.
((Ppl get to "administer" this amount, then have to pay $10 income tax and maybe 25 other various bribes to banks for mortage payments and GST, and company profits etc, etc, etc, before keeping $3.25 to buy bananas to give the banana farmer a similar amount via the system of banana distribution so he ends up with 10c per banana. Its all far more complex than a company boss or union rep is willing to describe)). But a radio might take 120 hrs to fix right, and maybe I get $600, after giving them a discount of $3,300 off the wages of $3,900 which should be paid for 120 hours of work. Cash will be around for awhile yet, but in 20 years perhaps goverments will try to save money by not printing it. I'll be dead as the species of cash becomes extinct like the lions, tigers, and elephants, and thousands of lesser known species. Trouble may come if a government values a radio repair transaction as being worth say $3,900 instead of $600, and taxes people on the same rate as those earning average weekly earnings to discourage anyone offering discounts to compete, or to survive. All sorts of BS is possible, but so far, afaik, cash is still extremely popular here. But in 1983, if someone wanted to extend their house, all work valued above $10,000 had to be "declared" to prevent ppl hiding un-seen cash income in the form of house improvements. Guess what. Ppl just did little bits of improvements at a time and still managed to get their house extensions approved by the govt authorities. Bundles of notes went out of one pocket and into another one. But in Greece, there is mastery of the cash economy, and they have many other devious ways of keeping NOSY PARKER GOVT out of business, and as a result, you see the mess Greece is in. Two sides to every story.

Maybe another Great Depression might just happen. The Financial System BEAST of the world survives because other ppl have a hand in YOUR pocket whether you like it or not. The Beast extracts a steady trickle of bucks to make credit flow. The trickle is like food, a small percentage of body weight needs to be consumed by the Beast each day to survive and if the trickle feed stops, the Beast gets very sick indeed, thus giving everyone the shits in a big way. Departments of taxation and Criminal control departments of governments around the world are part of the Beast. Beastly health is mostly desirable, but colly wobbles can now be heard.

And there is a gigantic building here worth a billion or two being built at high speed for ASIO, the Oz branch of CIA equivalent, right here in town. Maybe it'll have about 3,000 ppl employed to keep a watch on what everyone else is doing, saying, typing, and sending, and its only "one small step" to knowing what everyone is thinking, and a "giant leap for mankind" to control thinking.

From what I see, everyone wants a cheap deal and they don't care about your wages, just their own.
Ppl don't care about the environment of anyone or anything living more than 5km away from themselves.
Most ppl don't really mind being spied on.
And many will happily spy on everyone else.
Its going on, and people ain't rioting in the streets about it.

Patrick Turner.

ROFLOL ... that is funny ...

But then, quite suddenly, you realize that the world is full of these irrational imbeciles who really believe this stuff and would vote or demand it "in."

The only happy point about our civilization facing the possibility of annihilating itself is the fact it would take these bastards to a place where they can no longer harm themselves or others ...

The OP may not be hauling mobile tube stuff anywhere. But best SW reception is at night, when the sun don't shine, and the wind hardly blows much. But many ppl here have bought solar photo-voltaic systems for the house roof and they sell the excess power back to the main supplier of the Grid. This pays for the electricity used at other times. But authorities worked out this payment for locally generated power was a subsidy paid by those without solar, and a loss and big shitfights over money occurred soon after solar panel uptake went way over what was expected. Encouraging solar was regarded as part of the "Being seen to be doing something Green and Good" and therefore getting votes, while in reality increasing the cost of electricity, and making SFA difference to overall CO2 emissions. So pay back rates ahve plummeted, and solar companies have gone broke, as only the rich can afford to pay for solar panels, let alone the batteries needed for use of power at night. Country dwellers can get by on low power of solar and batteries if they are careful and have low power everything, use batteries, cook on wood fire, heat water with wood stove, use gas maybe etc, but tube audio or radio is about out of the question, unless you use the low filament current tubes meant for portable radios so popular between 1935 and 1955. They would be very easy to rum from a few batteries, only 8 x 12V car batteries are needed for a B+ of 90Vdc, and its simple to arrange low voltage DC batteries for directly heated cathodes which use very little current. But such "portable tubes" are not being made now.

Plenty of good solid state SW radios operating on very low power are to be had. Ppl can then focus on antennas if they want good reception. The receiver performance is basically solved, but after WW3, if you survive, a good antenna to pick up other survivors transmitting with low power might be handy. This assumes WW3 will send the world back to about where it was in 1925, with maybe 2 billion survivors with accelerated death rates, and ever declining technical production ability for non essentials. Essentials like ammunition, bows and arrows will be manufactured.

Written by Clare Grant which both Messers Breen and Connelly is the true

To base their libellous statements on this man he is supposed to have been sectioned twice under the mental health act scotland

They have never met this man so what they both have been posting is libellous secondly they claim

This man has court injunctions against him preventing from owning any type

Liberty Net: November 5, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/11/liberty-net-november-5-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

W1WCR RETURNED as Net Control Station of the Liberty Net this week as a five-day power outage came to an end, and the N2IRJ phone patch brought a welcome new voice, K4HZY, to the netï¿½s airwaves, among many others.

Hereï¿½s a small sample of the items discussed this week on amateur radioï¿½s most exciting net:

ï¿½ Gangs of Black ï¿½youthsï¿½ ï¿½ ironically, at Detroitï¿½s Rosa Parks bus station ï¿½ have been beating and robbing bus drivers. Not to worry, though: In the most recent incident (which has sparked a work stoppage among terrified drivers) the Detroit police did arrive to help ï¿½ 30 minutes after the blood started to dry. (34 minutes)

ï¿½ Why were citizens arrested merely for taking pictures of Wisconsin legislators ï¿½ when those very same legislators empower bureaucrats to photograph and spy on us constantly? Government is supposed to be our servant, not our master. (51 minutes)

ï¿½ There seems to be a rising feeling of racial-nationalism in Russia, where the people are beginning to figure out the media billionairesï¿½ ï¿½racismï¿½ scam: They understand that ï¿½anti-racismï¿½ is just a code word for anti-White. (1 hour 20 minutes)

ï¿½ In Texas, local media have reported that a gang of Black males shouting anti-White slogans attacked, beat ï¿½ and raped ï¿½ an elderly White man. Why are the billionaire-owned media networks ï¿½ Fox News included ï¿½ not making a national uproar over this? They certainly would if the races were reversed. (1 hour 24 minutes)

ï¿½ According to long-standing law, when foreign countries refuse to re-accept their citizens who have committed crimes in the US, the illegal criminal is supposed to continue to be held ï¿½ and the visa and legal immigration privileges of that country are to be totally revoked. But the Washington regime not only refuses to revoke the visa and immigration privileges of such countries, but actually are releasing the illegal alien criminals back into American society scot-free. (2 hours 20 minutes)

ï¿½ All the agitation for war with Iran over its alleged ï¿½nuclear threatï¿½ is just as phony as the ï¿½weapons of mass destructionï¿½ scam

that got us into the tragic quagmire in Iraq ï¿½ and it truly shows the Zionist agenda of the billionairesï¿½ media, especially Fox News. (2 hours 30 minutes)

ï¿½ If you look at the history of the last 200 years or so, youï¿½ll see that every nation which kicked out the bankers and set up its own honest money system was eventually attacked by an ï¿½allianceï¿½ of other countries ï¿½ an ï¿½allianceï¿½ organized by the bankers to defeat any independent nation, and murder any independent leader. Of course, propaganda is used to convince the cannon fodder that they are fighting for ï¿½freedomï¿½ or ï¿½democracyï¿½ or something like that, but the reality is very different. (2 hours 52 minutes)

ï¿½ The money men believed that they could control us all ï¿½ and create perpetual economic growth ï¿½ through their debt slavery and fiat money system. Now that they are being proven wrong, will the people have enough knowledge and will to change the system once and for all? (4 hours 34 minutes)

Satellites are withstanding these on an almost daily basis, for years, however, laying hands to that technology might be a bit of a different story ... as, while one nation might wants its' own satellites hardened,

Oh,sorry. But this may be a miniature tube for microwave frequencies .
Where do they obtain high voltages - it must be smps type . Solar panels??

Dream on. Just about every satellite in the sky uses vacuum tubes. The TWT (travelling wave tube) is still the way to generate high, reliable power for space-borne transmitters.

Fact of the matter is, you don't need tubes in space, you already have a much better vacuum than can ever be created on earth ... you simply need the elements ...

They would be fools to attempt to boost the weight and fragility of vacuum tubes into space, if they have any other alternative ... high power is easily handled with the modern transistors ... the energy requirements of the heaters is also another no-go ...

Energy requirements are not a problem, and neither is G-loading on takeoff. You are inventing problems where none need exist. TWTs are mega-reliable devices with a very predictable life curve.

It is much more important to know exactly how long and how well your satellite is going to work than to hope to get longer by using a technology that might last longer, but will more probably die unexpectedly when struck by a cosmic ray burst.

Sometimes you can not predict how long a satellite will be used. A friend of mine worked on a civilian satellite for a defense contractor and just before the division was sold off, cleaned out any old documents and files they had on it.

Since the satellite he had worked on was way past its expected life (but still in use), the contracts had long expired, the work was not classified and a new improved one was due to be launched in a few days, he was told to dump it all.

A few days later, the booster exploded on the pad, and the replacement was destroyed.

The sattelite was kept running for many years, although there were no documents on what to do or how it was built.

Almost all of them use TWTAs, a form of vacuum tube, for their final downlink amplifiers.

What good is a diagram if the unit is 24,000 miles in the air?

It had better not be in the air... ;-)

Besides - I saw mention upthread of using the ambient vacuum with just the tube elements, rather than a typical evacuated glass (or other material) enclosure...is the vacuum in geosynchronous orbit really hard enough?
It would seem to me that there are probably plenty of gas molecules floating around at that height, even if it would still qualify as a "soft" vacuum. Anybody?

For all sorts of other reasons, standard enclosed tubes are used. Main reasons are first to contain the electrons so other metalwork doesn't get involved, and second to maintain the correct physical positioning. The helix is of very fine tolerance in both pitch and positioning. Space is certainly hard enough, but the environment around a satellite is frequently not space, but a diffuse cloud of exhaust gas which would extinguish a TWT immediately.

Ah. Good point!

Satellites do indeed need to use propellant of some sort to keep in position; I didn't think of that at all. And it would seem that even if the ambient vacuum were hard enough, conventional construction of the TWT would be needed to keep contaminants out of it during the satellite assembly process down on Terra firma.
But I must admit, the idea of using ambient vacuum tickles my fancy a bit. ;-)

Yesterday evening I'm calling CQ on the CW portion of the 10m band and an Australian station comes back to me with a 579 signal report. Then, this morning, there's an Egyptian station booming in and I worked him (simplex) on the second call. 10m is an incredible DX band. 12 meters has also been superb. Good times indeed.

I'm starting to think it might be fun to operate a 10 meter beacon that puts two or three watts. It'd be fun to watch the reports roll in. Could use an SLA battery to power it and keep it topped off with a small solar-powered charger. Hmm...

I'll prempt the probability that LV will call me a cunt and say to all, respectfully as any gentleman can, that when I am a cunt, I know it, and so LV needn't tell me about it.

Is LV getting WORSE as he's gettin older? wer'e into about 3 posts from him with the firstie dissing JS for imbecilic reasons, during a detailed discussion regarding 10,993.5 ways of building a radio and including side issues of tubes used in satellites. Innocent stuff. And who'd have guessed so many would have sprung from the woodwork to discuss tubey radio thingies when most ppl here thought only 3 people read r.a.t most days?
Anyway, then after such brevity from LV, we get stuff about guns, and being American. I reckon LV is frightened witless about the world outside himself.
I invite him to calm down, nobody is about to force him to be un-american, and probably nobody would find it interesting to do a home invasion at LV's house. Surely both activities would be boring, no?
Fat lotta good it does to have a shooter under the pillow when ya snoring ya head off while someone steps out the window with the family silver. Well, plasma TV set maybe.

But lemme tell ya, one does sure wake up fast when ya reach fo the gun while half asleep and ya shoot ya fucking dick off. Dozen madder; being dickless at 60 yo probably improves a man. But such an event does has ya thinkin fast about a doctor - fuck the TV set, let 'em have the darn thang.

Funny thing, I never had no need to ever even consider gettin a gun. Jus' no need. There's no need for a front fence, and no need for any dog. There used ta be a shiela livin 5 doors away down my street who used to have a couple of those horrible little yappie terriers. Story was that some bloke got slightly too amarous with her when she was 17, about 20 years before and she never got over it. She had one of those figures and a face that had blokes jus thinkin only one thing, but she just couldn't handle any man's advance. Anyway, kids round our way would chuck small rocks at her house windows whenever they walked past, and this set off the dogs, and that'd set off her neighbours, and they'd harrange the poor bitch about her 2 noisy dogs and all dogs and humans involved took an hour to calm down. Comical it was. Anyway, she musta moved because we don't cop the yap-yap or the argy-bargy neighbours any more. Lucky it was that nobody had a gun, and that nobody shot anyone, deliberately, or by mistake.

Such is life in Austrayan suburbs, where of course there are always a few ppl who have gorn astray, as ppl do, but remarkably, there is very little blood on the footpaths.

Well, I....

Fuck it, it's too complicated to explain. Hit the archives if you're interested. I haven't shot anyone so far, and I'm not planning on it. However, they day ain't over...

BTW, you're a cunt. I mean that in the nicest possible way, of course; no more than the usual amount of offense is intended. Hopefully Mr. Jute is reading this, so my efforts won't go entirely unappreciated...

Wow, I lit a loaded fart off here, didn't I?

First, I said use a Hallicrafters band switch and an Eddystone dial because there's probably a market for those with old Hallicrafterses with bad bandswitches and with regen builders respectively. The problem with the Hallicrafters band switch replacement market is that there are so many DIFFERENT ones, if they were all the same they'd be reproduced. Remember rotary switches are modular, to a degree, the company that makes them builds them out of mostly off the shelf parts, and in fact you CAN get new ones built, but the problem is that they cost more than the value of most hallicrafters radios, since they have to put them together as one offs. 500 units takes the price from $400 to $25-50 each. At twenty five bucks a shot you could sell a couple hundred in six months....IF you had a unit that went into enough popular radios.

Eddystone dials are a similar thing.

The market has to be a mix of nostalgia and survival mentality. Yes, a solid state radio can be made EMP proof, or highly resistant, but it takes some doing.

As far as power in such a situation....In the old days they used car batteries for heater voltages and a stack of dry cells, a dynamotor or a vibra-pack for B+..

Look carefully at the old Collins and National sets. They developed it to something of a fine art.

As an aside, any "survivalist" with half a brain has buried a couple of solid state complete radios as well as a pile of surplus semiconductors useful post-Blast in old ammo cans. A stash of common bipolar and FETs, silicon diodes, common chips for radios and whatnot, buried under ground could be more valuable than gold and at a hell of a lot lower current acquisition price today. Some discussion on which types would be interesting.

I don't consider myself a survivalist but I have a couple of guns and some ammo buried along with a couple of full jerry cans of 100LL avgas (it doesn't go bad) and some electronic stuff, plus some garage sale Craftsman tools, some spools of wire from a motor shop (short ends), and a couple things I won't mention. Better safe than sorry I figure.

...so all this taken into consideration ... How much will this NEW TUBED RADIO cost to build ? Ten -to-fifteen grand ?? Or a hell of a lot more than that ???

Weekly Highlights and Forecasts
#
Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
07 - 13 November 2011

Solar activity was at low to moderate levels. Activity began at low levels on 07 November, although Regions 1339 (N19E45, L=102, class/area Fkc/1540 on 04 November) and 1338 (S=14, L=121, class/area Ehi/375 on 03 November) both exhibited spot areal coverage growth. Late on 07 November, a filament channel eruption was observed in SDO/AIA imagery beginning around 07/2232Z. LASCO C2 imagery first indicated a CME liftoff from the NW limb at 07/2348Z.
Activity remained at low levels on 08 November, as Regions 1339 and 1338 both started to decay and simplify magnetically. On 09
November, activity increased to moderate levels when a long duration M1 flare occurred at 09/1335Z. Associated with this event were a Type II radio sweep with an estimated shock velocity of 750 km/s and an Earth directed full-halo CME, visible in LASCO C2 imagery at 09/1336Z. Activity decreased to low levels on 10 November with the largest event of the day being a C6/1f flare at 10/1831Z. Region 1339 remained the largest region on the disk but continued to decay.
On 11 November, activity remained at low levels with Region 1344 (S19, L=101, class/area Dai/200 on 12 November) producing a long duration C4/Sf flare at 11/0705Z with an associated partial-halo CME. The CME had an estimated plane-of-sky speed of 825 km/s, based on SOHO/LASCO C2 images, and appeared to have a slight earth directed component. On 12 November, activity remained at low levels with occasional C-class flares. Regions 1339 and 1338 continued to decay while Region 1344 continued to increase in magnetic complexity, areal coverage, and total spot count before stabilizing on 13 November

No proton events were observed at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at normal levels throughout the period.

Geomagnetic field activity ranged from quiet to minor storm levels.
The period began under quiet to unsettled conditons on 07 November.
Activity increased on 08 November to quiet to unsettled conditions with isolated periods of active to minor storm levels at high latitudes. Mostly quiet levels returned on 09 November and continued through 13 November.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
16 November - 12 December 2011

Solar activity is expected to be at predominately low levels with a chance for M-class activity through the period. Old Region 1339 (N19, L=102) returns on 27 November bringing an increased probability of M-class activity and a slight chance for an X-class event.

No proton events are expected at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at background levels.

Geomagnetic field activity is expected to be quiet for the greater portion of the forecast period. Unsettled conditions are possible on 26-27 November and again on 09-10 December with the return of recurrent coronal hole high speed streams.

You're making too much of an assumption. The cheap receivers used off the shelf parts. But better ones used custom parts. Design is a tradeoff, and using off the shelf bandswitch meant layout was determined by the switch. Making their own, they could do what was needed for best design, the cost might be higher but it's offset by ease in the rest of the layout. Which is why you can't make a bandswitch that will fit all the receivers from even one manufacturer.

There were Eddystone dials because the company made them for their receivers and then happened to sell them as parts. Hammarlund made parts, they were well known for their capacitors. National sort of, but then they had Millen as a sort of manufacturing arm.

But if you wanted to use the bandswitch from the Hammarlund SP-600, you'd have to follow the layout and design very carefully, since the turret bandswitch was a key part of the receiver.

You're stuck with how many bands the receiver had, you're stuck with their layout, you're stuck with using the same sort of design as the original receiver.

A bandswitch is troublesome, and bulky, and in good receivers, expensive. Which is why when solid state came along, there was a trend to do as much bandswitching through DC as possible so the switch just had to control DC and didn't have to be near the circuitry. Hence diodes were used as switches. Relays sometimes. People saw that the cost of an active device was so low, it was cheaper to duplicate oscillators than use a bandswitch to switch coils and crystals. There again, it looks like a bad move cost wise, but if the benefits are sufficient, then it's a good move. The bandswitch becomes simpler (so no special part needed), the layout becomes simpler.

Ray Moore once had an article in Ham Radio about receiver design. It was nominally a description of a mostly AM broadcast band receiver he'd built. But he made the point that a commercial receiver has to cut costs, since each component is multiplied by however large the run is. For someone making their own receiver, the cost of an extra bypass capacitor is only five cents, or whatever, and no overhead on that extra capacitor. It's simpler to add components if it makes the design simpler, rather than cut components and deal with the issues. So having three IF stages rather than two is not that big a deal cost wise for the home builder, but having those three stages running at less gain than if there were two makes layout simpler.

Those are horrible models for the homebuilder.

They were exceptional receivers, but they are also built like tanks. The more expensive the receiver, the more shielding there is inside (in part because it's good design, but likely also a reflection of their more complicated design). Some of those receivers are awful to repair, since you have to pull out layers and layers of pieces to get to the section you need to deal with. Some of that is fallout from the need for a central bandswitch.

You can't duplicate them unless you are willing to make copies, which are beyond what most are capable of.

That simple, since there's only a few tubes.

9v "transistor" batteries in series. It doesn't take that many to get reasonable B+ and since tubes are low current, it's reasonable.

Of course, towards the end of the life of tubes, one could get some that ran off 12v, intended for use in car radios. Not so useful now since they were produced in a limited time span as transistors were taking over, so quantity is relatively limited.

The R392 ran off 24 or 28 volts, using those low plate voltage tubes. Of course, it had a lot of tubes so the filament drain was large.

Of course, some people experimented with low voltage on regular tubes. A loss of gain, but sometimes that was a good thing.

As I said, one of the legislators voting for the bill. I'm in media. I frequently interview legislators about their intents, and their actions. I've been attempting to get the Attorney General on the line to explain how this law affects street level commerce.
Louisiana has been attempting to get control of cash transactions since I lived there in the 80's.

They also attempted to ban owners' self repair of their own cars through similar legislation.

It's an interesting state. More a foreign country than a State.
Where the limits of the Constitution appear not to apply. And with this bill, 'legal tender' of the United States becomes illegal to use within the State of Louisiana.

A court test is being prepared on this matter. Expect significant debate locally on this. If not resistance.

Agreed on that point.

But the language of the bill is sufficiently broad to allow interpretation beyond commercial interests alone, to include persons conducting flea markets, garage sales, or one on one transactions.
To the degree that it's had a chilling effect on flea markets on the local level, in areas where economic distress has made flea markets a significant segment of the shopping culture.

Which was good, basically. Hallicrafters was profitable-see Ed Romney's discussion in his book. We want 500 kHz to 30 MHz in four or five bands, which was de rigeur for general coverage receivers.

The S/Line was not "built like a tank", but it was innovative and of good quality. The R-390s and the A-line approach that designation much more closely, as do Stoddart RI-FI measuring receivers and certain Mackay Marine and Racal sets. S/Line was inspired by Art Collins' purchase of a M series Leica camera, well built but also stylish and compact. There was in fact a company that DID clone S/Line, except the cabinetwork was kludgy by comparison. This is analogous to the Hickok and Jetronix clones of Tek tube scopes-they weren't quite as good but still way better than service grade scopes.

Your selective attention is interesting.

It's the broadness of the language that expands the limits. Because the broadness of the language does nothing to limit the definition of the terms. And, one more time, the legislators voting for the bill specifically intend for the law to include garage sales, flea markets and one on one cash transactions. This by their own admission.

Wow. Obfuscation 101. This discussion has suddenly become a waste of bandwidth.

Bottom line...I've lived there, you haven't. I deal with the legislators in Louisiana every week, you don't.

You're entitled to your skepticism. Enjoy it.

I have upgraded to an Icom pro III and have my 10 / 10 Icom 718 c/w automatic tuner (which you need) and power supply up for sale. This radio has been gone over by a tech and all is in perfect condition. Only thing you need is some sort of antenna. I can offer you some suggestions if you need one. Price for all $615.00. I am the original owner, non smoker and have the original invoice if you want a copy.

Only an imbecile would support the law in the first place ... why screw around with imbeciles?

He just needs to be told what an ignorant fooker he is and blown off ... that is the problem today, people get confused and think they should be "nice" to nuts, nuts need to be protected from hurting themselves and those around them ...

What we need is a whole new culture of privacy.

A climate in which not only can corporations, banks, and governments not restrict or tax or control our private transactions in any way
-- but a climate in which it is universally acknowledged that they also have _no_ right to even _know_ what those transactions are.

They are here to serve us, not the other way round. They are the peons, and we are the rulers -- not the reverse. They have no right to know ANYTHING about our transactions.

We, on the other hand, have the absolute right to know everything about theirs, and restrict them if we so choose.

A whole new mindset, of unalterable and immovable steel and will, is needed.

I doubt, however, that a generation of cowed and bowed dependents and yes-men can produce such a thing.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Yes, but that doesn't put more aborted foetus parts in my Pepsi - and that's what's important here.

Does throwback Pepsi have foetus bits? If so, that plus the real sugar sounds like a winning combination.

Isn't that the reason we initially hired "cops" for? I mean, I realize they are no longer doing a job for the people, the citizens -- and are mostly revenue generators for the town, city, county, state, feds, etc.
But, really, watching every dollar trade hands is NOT what we have public servants and authorities for, we don't have them to "punish" us
... we simply need to remind them to do the original job they were created for and the things you mention are already taken care of ...
let's just get the public servants and cops to do the job for the people.

Even rarer were tubes that drew almost no current. They used "cold cathodes" so they did not need expensive (in terms of current and heat dissipation) filaments and had low plate voltages.

They came out when transistors where just starting out, but rise of transisitors was so rapid and transistors were so cheap in comparison, that it was simpler and cheaper to build a 7 or 12 transistor radio than a 5 tube cold cathode one.

They showed some promise in the missle and space exploration systems of the time, because transistors could not stand the temperature extremes or cosmic radiation they would be exposed to. That also did not last long, as improved "space grade" transistors came out.

What really killed them was NASA's adoption of the new integrated circuits (which actually pre-date the "space race").

Cold Cathode tubes were voltage regulators, displays, etc. I have never seen a cold cathode amplifier.

Between miniature tubes and solid state there were Compactrons, which were several tube stages in a single envelope.

Yes, you hit on the real death of tubes right there, the IC or integrated transistors and our ability to place umpteen millions on a

There were tubes which contained a bit of thorium and required minimal heater current. The slight radioactivity is a no go, as well as the potential pollution to the environment ...

I think the tubes being referred to are field emission triodes and various microwave tubes. You can certainly make a linear amplifier with field emission devices.

Valves in space have probably finally met their match with Gallium Nitride. It is pretty radiation-hard, and capable of valve-type power outputs.

I agree, John. The purpose of the Constitution is not to help the police.

If limiting government knowledge of my private transactions to zero -- except in the case of a properly obtained and strictly limited warrant -- slows down the police a little bit, well, that's just the way it will have to be. Tough luck if a few crimes aren't solved as fast. The greatest crime of all, the theft of our freedom, would stop -- and that's _far_ more important than getting your BMW back, or reducing the goddamned deficit.

Of course, restoring our privacy would also entail an instant and total end to the income tax, since no entity would have any right whatsoever to know what your income even was, much less tax it. Yessiree Bob!

Of course I wouldn't want vomit in my Pepsi; that's just gross.

Quite so. And, take the sports out of the schools, the art out of public projects, the perks out of public servant benefits, the special interest grants, the gay grants, the womens' grants, etc, etc, etc.

Schools are for learning, public buildings are for absolute necessary business of the people, etc.

I am for the govt getting a flat 10% of your net earnings and that is it ... whatever we can't afford on that, too bad. But, one thing we need to do is bring all the public servant and govt workers, be that fed, state, county, city or town, pay into correct equivalency to the private sector pay ... and cut a million other unnecessary govt expenditures and funding ... there will be plenty of money, long as they support Americans with jobs and an acceptable standard of living ... as it stands now, with income tax, property tax, sales tax, fees and fines, hidden taxes, gasoline taxes, etc., somewhere between 50% and 60% of your income is going to the government in taxes -- some of these taxes are just known by other names.

Take a hard look at how they have bent and warped the Constitution, laws and systems, we are now simply paying them for the privilege of being slaves to them.

It would be nice to have a nice "pirate SW station" discussing some of this ... <grin>

JS

As you know, the Senate has failed to pass a budget resolution for three years running. Now they won't even let the American people do the job for them.

This afternoon, 200 FreedomWorks members and representatives from tea party groups across the country met in the Russell Senate Office building to formally present our plan to balance the federal budget and cut $9.7 trillion in spending over the next 10 years. Unfortunately, it seems like the only thing Washington wants to hear is excuses.

The Democrats who run the Senate Rules Committee were so afraid of the tea party plan to balance the federal budget that they ordered committee staff to remove the microphones we had set up for the event while Capitol Police blocked the doors of our hearing room, which had been reserved by Sen. Mike Lee (R-Utah) specifically for this event more than two weeks ago. At the same time, a "suspicious package" was reported in the room next door and all visitors and staff were barred from the area.

Although Senator Lee courageously stood up for us, he ultimately determined that the hearing should proceed without further interruption or harassment. For that reason we moved to another location off the Capitol grounds where our commission of 12 volunteer tea party activists presented their recommendations to a fired-up crowd.

Senator Lee was also joined there by Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY), Reps. Joe Walsh (R-IL), Steve King (R-IA), Mike Pence (R-IN), Mick Mulvaney (R-SC) and Paul Broun (R-GA). Rep. Broun received a standing ovation when he offered to help draft and sponsor legislation that could eventually allow our recommended cuts to become law.

Unfortunately, the unexpected location change disrupted live coverage of our hearing on CSPAN, but please click link below to watch the video, which provides highlights from this afternoon's events.

What Fascism Is & Isn't

No other word causes so much misunderstanding, confusion, and heated debate in politics than fascism. The term has been applied to many individuals such as McCarthy, Hoover, and others. It is frequently used to describe government policies and government themselves, often incorrectly. What then is fascism exactly? Webster's Dictionary defines it as: "A government system marked by a centralized dictatorship, stringent socioeconomic controls and belligerent nationalism." But the author takes exception with that definition. At best, the definition is vague and abstract. Nor does the definition seem capable of taking into all forms of fascism.

There is a resurgent, widespread attempt by the far right to label fascism as a form of socialism. Fredrick von Hayek was the first to attempt labeling the Nazis as socialists in his book The Road to Serfdom published in 1944.70 The hard right quickly adopted it, as it allowed the hard right to escape the charges that they had much in common with the Nazis.2 Such endeavors are not only silly, but dishonest as well and represent an attempt by the far right to distance themselves for their earlier support of Hitler.

Hayek's book is based on two erroneous assumptions from the very beginning. He first assumes that fascism and communism are one and the same, as they are both totalitarian systems. This makes about as much sense as calling a maple tree a pine tree because both are trees. His second erroneous assumption lays in his belief that only socialism or liberalism leads to totalitarian systems. In fact, all political systems can lead to totalitarian systems and all political systems are inherently unstable, as is any system created by man.

From there, Hayek takes severe liberties with history. For instance, he goes on to claim that by deliberate policy the United States by allowed the growth of cartels and syndicates after 1878.71 Indeed this date and time period is significant, but not for a move towards socialism or liberalism. Rather, it's the opposite a move towards fascism and corporate rule. Even a reader with a rudimentary knowledge of American history would recognize this time frame as the beginning of the robber baron era and laissez faire economics, precisely the type of economic policy Hayek holds in utmost esteem.

Hayek offers little proof to support his conclusions; in fact the book is devoid of any proof or even examples to support his findings. The book degenerates into an argument based upon unsubstantiated assertion. He argues against the nation state and proposes a supernational authority or world federation made up of the financial elite. In essence, Hayek proposes a world made up of sovereign corporations accountable to no one. Not only did Hayek take severe liberties with American history, he ignored the very nature of fascism in Germany and Italy.

In various speeches made shortly after the March on Rome, Mussolini stated, "We must take from state authority those functions for which it is incompetent and which it performs badly... I believe the state should renounce its economic functions, especially those carried out through monopolies, because the state is incompetent in such matters... We must put an end to state railways, state postal service and state insurance." The state returned large monopolies to the private sector after returning them to profitability such as the Consortium of Match Manufactures, privatized the insurance system in 1923, the telephone system in 1925, and many of the public works.

Thus it is no surprise that the right wing attempts to try and label fascism as socialism in trying to distance themselves from their previous support of fascism.
Perhaps the only redeeming feature in Hayek's book is his acknowledgement of environmental problems.72 Indeed this is significant, considering the book was first published in the 1940s, long before the birth of the environmental movement. Hayek readily acknowledges the problem of industrial pollution and the harmful effects of deforestation, yet he stops short of any meaningful solution. Instead of offering a viable solution Hayek condemns government regulation and would allow market forces to provide the solution. However, it was these same market forces that produced the problem. We have plenty of proof of such a fool hearty approach both here and globally. As late as the 1970s rivers caught fire in the United States, cities were smog stricken and harmful pollutants were damaging the environment world wide. Today we face the problems of global warming and ozone depletion, and the problem of environmental estrogens, which has the potential of being even more threatening than both global warming and ozone depletion.
But perhaps the most damning of all evidence that Hayek was dead wrong comes from the implementation of an economic system based on his beliefs. Hayek later taught at the University of Chicago, the same university that trained the "Boys from Chicago" who were the economic brains behind the fascist regime of Pinochet in Chile. There is no question in the matter that under Pinochet, Chile was indeed fascist. More alarming, Hayek is an idol to several top-level officials in the George W. Bush administration. They are dangerous close to imposing a fascist style economy on the United States.

In order to dispel the myth of the Nazis being socialists we need to first define socialism. Socialism is rigidly defined as an economic system in which the workers own the means of production and distribution of goods. A more relaxed definition would be simply that the workers maintain political control over the production and distribution of goods. Even using the more relaxed definition of socialism, the Nazis can not be labeled as socialists as there simply was no worker control over the production or distribution of goods in Nazi Germany. In fact, the Nazis outlawed legitimate labor unions. In place of the original unions, the Nazis implemented quasi-like unions that were controlled by the industrialists. In a déjà vu manner, the Republican Party has recently tried to enact a similar measure, conferring legal status on worker groups controlled by corporations.

Some writers and historians have argued that you cannot have fascism without corporatism, as the corporate power structure has much in common with fascism. During the period preceding the outbreak of WWII it was common to refer to fascism as corporatism in polite English society.

More recently others have tried to define fascism as the "Third Way", in the sense that it borrowed ideas from both capitalism and socialism. The basic philosophy behind the "Third Way" incorrectly labels any regulations or government controls over businesses as socialism; essentially it's just a restatement of syndicalism. Such nonsense should be rejected whole heartily. It again represents an attempt to distance the right from their support of Hitler in the 1930s and ignores that the basis of the German economy under Hitler was a capitalist system where the means of production remained in private hands. Further, following the logic of the "Third Way," one would have to label all capitalistic systems as "Third Way," for throughout history there has never been a pure capitalistic system. A pure capitalist economy is so inherently and fatally flawed that it's never even been tried. But that is to be expected for any system that awards the winner with all the eggs. Nor has there been a pure socialistic system. Human greed simply prevents it.

The dangers of such nonsense can be illustrated with the following quote taken from a Baptists fundamentalist's web page in their labeling of the Japanese economy as fascist: However, Fascism is an economic term, denoting the type of economy where the Means of Production [factories, companies] and the ownership of raw materials [mines, oil wells] remains in the hands of private individuals, but where the government intervenes to determine how many competitors will be allowed to produce the same thing, how much is produced, and what prices may be charged.1

Here it can be seen that the term fascism has been clearly misapplied. This description could past for the economic theory of the fascist philosopher George Sorel. This is a description of syndicalism; it was the economic model of fascist Italy and Nazi Germany to a large extent. Syndicalism does draw some aspects from socialism, but the system is still a capitalistic system as ownership of the means of production and distribution of goods remain in private hands. It is no more socialism than the conclusion of the Robber Barons and the corrupt politicians of Tammy Hall. The only difference between this example of syndicalism is that the government participation is open versus the backroom corruption of politicians in Tammy Hall.

Not only Japan invoke syndicalism, but almost all the Pacific Rim nations do, to some extent. These are the same nations that the hard right has held up in the past as darlings of capitalism and free enterprise. Yet these are precisely the same economic policies of the Nazis that they have tried to foist off as socialism. The key distinction here is the means of production still remains in private hands, just as it did in Nazi Germany. No capitalistic society has ever existed without some form of syndicalism or government control over the economy. The closest America came to an entirely capitalistic system was either the 1890s and the Robber Barons or the laissez faire policies of Herbert Hoover, and as we all know, that didn't end too well in the Great Depression of the 1930s.

No where does the quote above refer to totalitarian control or extreme nationalism. In fact, they have tried to define fascism in strictly economic terms for their own purposes. But it does serve to point out the dangers of inventing the "Third Way" or the use of syndicalism in an attempt to label the Nazis. The problem here is determining where syndicalism ends and capitalism begins. Is the trading of pollution credits a form of syndicalism or is it free enterprise? In America today, the hard right would attempt to label it as socialism, as they try to do with any laws or regulations of business. In fact, the past laws regulating corporations were much more severe and restrictive in the 1800s than today. One could argue that it was through syndicalism that the power elite and corporations gradually eroded those laws until corporations now enjoy more freedoms than what an individual enjoys. This is precisely what has happened in America.

But environmental and labor laws are not socialism. They are in fact nothing more than an attempt to bring an out of control system hell bent on exploitation of the environment and labor back to order. No labor law or environment law was ever passed in a vacuum. All of these laws were brought about by a need to correct an unhealthy or unsafe situation. While there are some corporations that strive to provide a clean and safe workplace, there are many whose only concern is the bottom line and they turn a blind eye towards safety and view their employees as expendable commodities.

Regulation of businesses or corporations by itself is not socialism. A business entity such as a corporation has no rights other than what privileges a society wishes to grant it. People have rights; a paper creation of a society such as a corporation has no inherent rights. Business entities such as corporations only have conditional privileges based upon providing for the common good of the society, which granted the charter. All such paper creations have an obligation to serve the society, which created it. Failing to perform that obligation, it loses any right for its continuing existence. It the obligation of that society to restrict the rights of such entities to promote equality for all and to prevent a ruling aristocracy from developing. This view is hardly socialism or even radical, unless one wishes to label Thomas Jefferson as a radical socialist as he more eloquently stated it:

"I hope we shall take warning from the example of England and crush in its birth the aristocracy of our moneyed corporations which dare already to challenge our Government to trial, and bid defiance to the laws of our country."3 Perhaps one of the better definitions of fascism comes from Heywood Broun, a noted American columnist in the 1930s:
"Fascism, is a dictatorship from the extreme right or to put it a little more closely into our local idiom, a government which is run by a small group of large industrialists and financial lords...I think it is not unfair to say that any businessman in America, or public leader, who goes out to break unions is laying the foundations for fascism"75

A definitive definition of fascism is a totalitarian government with extreme nationalist tendencies in which the government is controlled and operated for the benefit of a few elite. However, it should be noted that an all-encompassing definition of a complex system can not be simply stated. Such simple definitions undoubtedly fail in time. A caveat to the above definition would be anytime the government places the rights of corporations or the elite above the rights of the citizens, it represents a step towards fascism. A better insight into what fascism is can be obtained by listing the traits that are common to the classical fascist states of Franco's Spain, Nazi Germany and fascist Italy. A list of traits of fascism is presented below. Note that the first two are the two most defining traits, obviously many of the others can be applied to many other social-political systems as one moves down the list.
1. Totalitarian
2. Extreme nationalism
3. Top down revolution or movement
4. Destructive divisionism such as racism and class warfare
5. Extreme anti-communism, anti socialism, and anti-liberal views
6. Extreme exploitation
7. Opportunistic ideology lacking in consistency as a means to grab power
8. Unbridled Corporatism
9. Reactionary
10. The use of violence and terror to attain and maintain power
11. Cult-like figurehead
12. The expounding of mysticism or religious beliefs

Not all fascists need exhibit all of the traits once again it should be emphasized that all fascist states will exhibit a totalitarian view. Most fascist states will have an extreme nationalism policy.

However, extreme nationalism is not mandatory. States such as Spain under Franco and Chile under Pinochet were indeed fascist states, but they could hardly be described as having a policy of extreme nationalism.

A brief look at the above traits and how they relate to fascism will convey a better understanding of what fascism really is, using Nazi Germany as an example. First, because it was undisputedly fascist and secondly because there is more literature available on the Nazis than on either fascist Italy or Franco's Spain. Moreover, the use of the Nazi's as an example is closer to the focus of this book, which is creeping fascism in America.

Creeping fascism is the gradual lost of freedoms of the masses to the power elite. Full-blown fascism has never appeared all at once. The Nazis took several years to reach the final state of full-blown fascism. It took the Nazis five years before Kristallnacht, which marks the beginning of the "Final Solution." The Nazis gradually took away the freedoms of the citizens of Germany until they were able to launch the Holocaust. This was the reason for including the caveat in the definition of fascism above, "Any action taken by the government that places the rights of the elites and corporations above the citizens is a step towards fascism."

Such actions will not look like fascism some may even appear to be reasonable. Its only when the summation of many such actions ends in a fascist state that such actions can be seen as a step towards fascism. Make no mistake in understanding that the power elite, those that own and run America's corporations, are fascist. They have forced war on this country to protect their assets, they have over-exploited their employees, they have used violence to bust unions, and they rely on divisionist policies such as racism and class warfare to maintain their power.

The erosion of our freedoms in the United States was prolonged by our constitution. Nevertheless, over time the lost of freedoms has left America at the edge of a chasm. Any further loss of freedoms and America will begin an irreversible slide into the deep abyss of fascism.

Before looking at the traits of fascism a brief review of the history of fascism and its roots in modern philosophy is needed. By looking at the roots of fascism in philosophy, we can gain an understanding why fascism is often described as reactionary. By looking at the various philosophers that have come to be associated with fascism, we will be able to see that many of these traits come directly from fascism's roots in philosophy. In that way, we can then see how some of these traits that can be applied to other social-political system are central to fascism.

Many writers have assumed that fascism has no intellectual or philosophical roots due to its lack of a consistent ideology. But such views are incorrect; the roots of fascism extend back to the French Revolution. The French Revolution is one of those landmark events in the history of Europe marking the beginning of a major shift in European culture and governments. In essence, fascism was a reaction to the French revolution. It was a reaction particularly to the slogan of the revolution of "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity" that was hated the most.

The concept of liberty from oppressive regimes in the daily lives of the citizens, including forced religious values, and the concept of voting and majority rule where the minority still retained a set of inalienable rights, incensed the early philosophers of fascism. Such a concept was a direct threat to the kings and nobles of the time, as well as to the church. Remember this was a time for debtor's prisons, indentured servants, and vassal states.

Equality, in the eyes of the law, was unspeakable. How could a mere peasant have the same rights under the law as the kings, nobles, and merchants? This was the time when the king's word was the law. Rights were based on the social standing of one's birth. The only rights a person had at the time were the rights that the king was willing to extend, and they could be withdrawn at any moment.

Fraternity, in the sense that all men and women shared humanity was considered heresy. It was a time when slaves were still considered and treated as animals and women were considered property, and not part of a greater humanity that needed to be shared.

All three terms meant a loss in power and control by those in power. But, this is exactly what the philosophers that have come to be associated with fascism were reacting to and rejecting. The period following the French Revolution produced a virtual intellectual stew of various philosophies, including those of Marx and Engels. A brief look at some of the major philosophers of fascism will show how they relate to the traits listed early, and how they were a reaction to the French Revolution. This list of philosophers is by no means complete, but it will suffice to show that many of the traits attributed to fascism above have roots going back as far as the French Revolution.

Arthur Schopenhauer (1788-1860) was a German philosopher perhaps best known for his The World as Will and Representation.4 His beliefs held that the will is the underlying and ultimate reality. The whole phenomenal world was only the expression of will. Individuals have free will only in the sense that everyone is an expression of a will. Thus we are not authors of our own destiny, character, or behavior, according to Schopenhauer. His views parallel the development of relativistic physics that came a century later. His views were influential on Nietzche, among others.

Georg Hegel (1770-1831), a German philosopher held pantheism as the heart of his beliefs. The Phenomenology of Spirit and Science of Logic are two of his better-known works. He viewed that all existence and all history was divine and that nature was sacred. He viewed God as an absolute spirit that also manifested itself in material things and individuals. He believed God acted through humans and embodied himself first in nature, then in the rising stages of human consciousness and civilization. He also had an ethnocentric and egocentric view. He maintained that the German nation was the highest carrier of the wave of God's development. He believed that the bureaucratic monarchy of Prussia was the highest form of state. These later views were certainly manifested in the Nazi's view of the Aryan race, as shown in the following quote.

"Thus the highest purpose of the folkish state is concern for the preservation of those original racial elements which bestow culture and create the beauty and dignity of a higher mankind. We, as Aryans, can conceive of the state only as the living organism of a nationality which not only assures the preservation of this nationality, but by the development of its spiritual and ideal abilities leads it to the highest freedoms."8

Fredrich Nietzche (1844-1900), also a German philosopher was best known for his work Thus Spake Zarathustra.5 Hitler liked to be photographed staring at a bust of Nietzche. Nietzche theorized two sets of morals, one for the ruling class and another for the slave class. Nietzche viewed that ancient empires grew out of the ruling class and that religions arose out of the slave classes, (which denigrates the rich, the powerful, rationalism, and sexuality.) He developed a concept of an "overman," a superhuman, which symbolized man at his most creative and highest intellectual development. Obviously, the "overman" was manifested in the Nazi's view of the Aryan race. He suffered a mental break down, most likely from the advances of syphilis, and was cared for by his mother and later his sister, Elisabeth. His sister painstakingly gathered his notes to publish his latter works. However, she was active in the rising anti-Semitic movement at the time and may have tainted his later work with her views. From time to time, Nietzsche enjoys a rebirth of popularity. Today is one such rebirth, fitting in well with the unmitigated greed and corporatism of today's hard right. Nietzsche's connection to the Nazis is obvious, as shown by the following quotation.

"with satanic joy in his face, the black haired Jewish youth lurks in wait for the unsuspecting girl whom he defiles with his blood, thus stealing her from her people. With every means he tries to destroy the racial foundations of the people he has set out to subjugate. Just as he himself systematically ruins women and girls, he does not shrink back from pulling down the blood barriers for others, even on a large scale. It was and it is Jews who bring Negroes into the Rhineland, always with the same secret thought and clear aim of ruining the hated white race by necessarily resulting bastardization, throwing it down from its culture and political height, and himself rising to be master."9

Notice the similarity in this passage and the Council of Conservative Citizens that Senator Lott and representative Barr supported before becoming embroiled in the resulting scandal in late 1998.10 The web site for this white supremacist group described interracial marriage to the mixing of chocolate milk with plain milk, and labeled it as a path to racial extinction. They also described Lincoln as a communist. 11

Henri Bergson (1859-1941) was a French philosopher with a Jewish father and an English mother. He was the winner of the Nobel Prize for literature in 1927. He rejected the idea that scientific principles could explain all existence. He was a promoter of what has become known as Social Darwinism.6 Perhaps one of his better known works was Time and Free Will. He was also a believer in pantheism. Once again, we see the obvious connection with the Nazis of a master race in the following quote concerning the Nazi's euthanasia program:

"...a secret circular went out from the Reich interior Ministry which marked the beginning of a programme of euthanasia for mentally ill or deformed children up to three years old. Doctors would be required to report all such cases to the health authority on special forms; the forms would then be forwarded to a panel of three medical assessors who would adjucate over life or death by appending "-" or "+." Should all three place a "+", a euthanasia warrant would be issued, signed by the Reichsleiter Philipp Bouhler of the Fuhrer's Chancellery or SS_Oberfuhrer Dr Viktor Brack, head of the Chancellery's Euthanasia Department II. And so it happened: infants marked for death were transferred to what were referred to as Children's Special Departments in political reliable clinics, there to be given a "mercy death" by injection or in one institution at Eglfing-Haar simply starved by a progressive reduction of diet."7

Geroge Sorel (1847-1922) was a French philosopher who had considerable influence on Mussolini. His writings promoted an economic model based on syndicalism. He also believed in the degeneration of societies and believed that social decay could only be delayed by idealists who were willing to use violence to obtain power. His views were extremely anti-democratic and anti-liberal.

With this very brief review of philosophy has shown that the fascist traits of nationalism, totalitarian, racist, violence, unbridled corporatism, reactionary, and the top down nature of fascism all are grounded in the works of past philosophers.

A totalitarian government is one that seeks to maintain control over all aspects of public and private life by using propaganda, terror, and technology. Totalitarian regimes seek control over political, social, and the culture. However, economic control is left in the hands of a few elites in the fascist state. While the means of economic control is left in the private hands of a few elites, this same group controls the government. In essence the government becomes the tool by which the rich and the corporations maintain control. The distinction is important to note as it separates communism from fascism. In a communist state the control over the economy moves to the inside of government, while in the fascist state it remains in private hands. Dictatorships differ in seeking only limited control over the political environment of a society.

There was only limited government ownership under the Nazis. Prior to the Nazi take over, the German governments took over failing businesses and continued to operate them. When the Nazis took over the government already owned a large number of enterprises. When the Nazis took over they began to privatize many of these businesses, especially the ones that had remained profitable during the depression like the electric utilities.

Once Hitler assured big business that they would be free to continue to operate, they failed to raise any further objections to the Nazis. The large German steel and coal industries especially welcomed the Nazis. Hitler's plans for rearmament meant large contracts for new ships, tanks, etc. Later during the war when a labor shortage appeared, it was Krupp from the German steel industry that first raised the question of using slave labor from the concentration camps. At first the Nazis were reluctant to allow the inmates to be used as slaves as it would slow the progress of the "final solution." However, once Krupp offered to pay for the slaves the Nazis readily agreed and soon there was no shortage of companies seeking slaves.
What is less understood about the totalitarian power Hitler achieved was the path he took to obtain that power. There never has been totalitarian regime that gained instant total control. Such a sudden change would spawn sudden revolutions. Mussolini took three years before consolidating his power in Italy. In case of the Nazis, it took even longer. Nor did the path to totalitarian Nazi state start with the elevation of Hitler to the position of chancellor. Some historians trace the roots of the path all the way back into the 1800s. A complete analysis of German history from the time of the monarchy to the seating of Hitler is beyond the scope of this book, if not beyond the scope of any single book, as volumes could be written. What follows is a very brief look at the slow erosion of freedom and the concentration of power as it relates to the final totalitarian state.
For the most part, the period following WWI was a period dominated by raucous politics and a series of crisis in Germany. The two periods in which the Nazis gained the most strength was the early 1920s, during the hyper inflationary period, culminating with the Beer Hall Putsch and the depression of 1929-1931. There is little need to examine the raucous politics of that period, everyone is well aware of Hitler's SA thugs breaking up political rallies of other parties which also resorted to the same tactics. It would not be untrue to describe many political rallies of the time as ending in brawls.
Hitler and the Nazis were extremists, and mostly rejected by the German voters during the good economic times of the 1920s. For example, in 1928 they only polled 2.6 percent of the vote, gaining just 14 seats out of the 491 seats in the Reichstag by virtue of the republic's proportional representation. By 1930 and the start of the depression, the Nazis had increased their seats to 107 out of 577 seats in the Reichstag. In the July 1932 election, at the height of the depression, the Nazis polled 37.4 percent of the vote winning 230 seats in the Reichstag, becoming Germany's largest party.13 In the Nov 1932 election, they only won 196 seats as an anemic economic recovery was already underway, the people began rejecting the Nazis and their radical views and actions.
Germany's plunge into a totalitarian state began before the Nazis took over. It was as much a result of a lack of a strong leadership as anything else. For the first eleven years of the German Republic there had been seventeen cabinets headed by nine different chancellors.12 Undoubtedly, the country faced grave crisis in this period such as hyperinflation, but the lack of strong leadership and an increased polarization was readily apparent. The Nazis were the most notorious radicals unwilling to compromise, but the other parties have to share some of the blame for this polarization as well. The blame can be extended beyond the parties to the vested interests behind each party, including that of big businesses. Fracturing the electorate by polarization was playing right into the divisionist character of the Nazis, whose radical program lacked a broad base of support as the election results from 1928 showed.

The policies of the German governments during the 1920s inadvertently aided the rise of the Nazis. Throughout the 1920s the government arrested many of the leaders from the left. It would not be unfair to term these arrests as purges. The arrest of any strong leaders emerging from the left only served to further polarize the country by creating a vacuum on the left that was only filled with the more radical communists. A similar situation is emerging in the United States, throughout this century the United States has conducted purges of the left: the Great Red Scare of 1919, McCartyism of the 1950s, and COINTELPRO operations during the sixties. Without the voices from the left to moderate policy, the political center in the United States has shifted to the hard right.

The immediate result in the lack of strong leadership is frequent chances in government, which only lead to more instability and chaos. An ideal parallel is the long string one term Presidents ending with Lincoln and the Civil War. The polarization of the Unite States gradually increased from about 1820 on resulting in one term presidents. Another string of one term Presidents ended with the election of Roosevelt in the middle of the Great Depression. In both U.S. case the ending result was not pleasant: a civil war and a depression.

Such frequent change in government does not allow businesses to make long range plans, nor does it allow for enough to time for programs enacted by a government to work. These effects then act as negative feedback, further increasing the polarization and the resulting chaos. Additionally, the German constitution was flawed and did not account for a negative parliament. Power in Germany was concentrated in the office of the president, headed by Hindenburg, who initially had been elected by conservatives and reactionary rightists. He was a member of the aristocratics from the Junker class and had been a war hero; he likewise held sentiments for the monarchy. The president had the power to appoint cabinets and chancellors. Beginning in 1930, Hindenburg began the practice of appointing chancellors of his choice that were not beholding to the parliament. To allow the chancellors to circumvent parliament, he granted these chancellors emergency powers that had been given to the president by the constitution. Starting in 1930, almost all national laws, including the power to tax, were enacted by presidential decrees and not by the parliament. Such presidential decrees would be similar to the executive orders in the United States.

Hence, even before Hitler was appointed to the chancellor position, power was being concentrated into the two offices of the chancellor and the president. At least twice before appointing Hitler as chancellor, Hindenburg entertained ideas of violating the constitution by not holding elections within the sixty days as required by the constitution.
Hindenburg had also avoided appoint Hitler as chancellor twice before January 1933. Even with the support of big business Hindeburg failed to appoint Hitler when the Nazis held more seats in the Reichstag than any other party.
It wasn't until after Hitler met in secret with von Pappen at the Cologne home of Baron Kurt von Schroder that Hindenburg would relent and appoint Hitler chancellor. The baron was the head of the international Schroder banking empire and had previously raised funds to pay off the Nazi's debt.
The secret meeting on January 4, 1933 allowed Hitler and von Pappen to work out their differences and to agree to a new cabinet under the direction of both. This secret meeting was the birthplace of the Third Reich.
However, there were two Americans that also were in attendance: John Foster Dulles and his brother Allen. The Dulles brothers were there as legal representatives for Kuhn Loeb Company, which had extended large short term credits to Germany. Their presence was to secure a guarantee of repayment from Hitler.
Moreover, Kurt von Schroder had extensive financial contacts in New York and London. He was a co-director of Thyssen foundry along with Johann Groeninger, Prescott Bush's New York bank partner. Schroeder was also the vice president and director of the Hamburg-Amerika Line, the same shipping line seized from Prescott Bush for trading with the enemy.
Throughout 1932, actions taken by the Bush-Harriman shipping line were directly responsible for bringing Hitler to power. The constitutional government tried to disarm the Nazi Brown Shirts to stop the mad election melees and murders. The U.S. embassy in Berlin reported:
" Hamburg-Amerika Line was purchasing and distributing propaganda attacks against the German government, for attempting this last-minute crackdown on Hitler's forces."
During 1932, Hitler's thugs murdered thousands of Germans. Arms for Hitler were shipped to Germany aboard Hamburg-Amerika Line. They were transferred to river barges before reaching Antwerp and then transported across Holland freely. Samuel Pryor, founder of Union Bank and a partner in the Hamburg-America Line was also executive committee chairman of Remington Arms. Hitler's Brown Shirts were armed primarily with Remington arms and Thompson submachine guns. A Senate investigation of Remington concluded that all of the political factions in Germany were armed with mostly American made guns.

Once Hitler and von Pappen had reached an agreement on their future course of actions. Pappen pressured Hindenburg to appoint Hitler as chancellor. The success of the meeting was recorded in Goebbels. On January 5, 1933 Goebbels wrote in his diary "If this coup succeeds, we are not far from power. . . . Our finances have suddenly improved." Hindenburg appointed Hitler, as chancellor with the understanding Hitler would be a parliamentary rather than a presidential chancellor. Hitler immediately set about sabotaging the efforts to from a parliamentary majority. Here is one of the first examples of fascism and divisionism.

On February 1, 1933 the German parliament was dissolved and new elections were scheduled for early March. Using his henchmen, Hilter had the Reichstag building burnt. The fire was blamed on the communist, his main revivals. Using the fire as an excuse, Hitler banned the communist from the upcoming election. Additionally, Goring deputized his storm troopers to harass any political opposition from his position in the cabinet; even then the Nazis could not achieve a majority in parliament as they polled only 43.9 votes.14 By summer, all political parties except the Nazis had been dissolved. On the death of Hindenburg in 1934, Hitler assumed the office of president and further consolidated his gripe on power, but it would take a couple of additional years before Hitler was a true totalitarian. He purged the justice system of judges with adverse views, appointing rabid Nazis in their place, and the storm troopers were given police powers. Justice was now the Nazi party line.

One does not need to expound upon the extreme nationalism of the fascist. The history of their invasion in a quest for world dominion is well known. Mussolini turned his attention to Ethiopia and North Africa; Hitler first to Austria, then Czechoslovakia, followed by Western Europe and later to Norway and the east.

Hilter had left a blueprint for his extreme nationalism and the quest for lebensraum in Mien Kampf as shown by the quote below.

"If the National Socialist movement really wants to be consecrated by history with a great mission for our nation, it must be permeated by knowledge and filled with pain at our true situation in this world; boldly and conscious of its goal, it must take up the struggle against the aimlessness and incompetence which have hitherto guided our German nation in the line of foreign affairs. Then without consideration of traditions and prejudices it must find the courage to gather our people and their strength for an advance along the road that will lead this people from its present restricted living space to new land and soil; and hence also free it from danger of vanishing from the earth or of serving others as a slave nation.

The Nationalist Socialist movement must strive to eliminate the disproportion between our population and our area-viewing this later as a source of food as well as a basis for power politics---between our historical past and the helplessness of our present impotence."15

The third trait of fascism is that it consists of a top down revolution or movement. It is becoming more accepted today that the Nazis drew support from all classes. Indeed, this seems a reasonable assumption when looking at all of the evidence. The storm troopers for the most part drew their numbers from the lower and middle classes. They were typically were unemployed laborers, inept middle management, or failed businessmen. Likewise, given the vote tally of over thirty percent in the 1932 elections, the Nazis had to have drawn votes from all social classes. But this has no bearing on who controlled the direction of the party. Control of the party rested solely with Hitler and whom he allied with. He chose to ally with the upper class and big business as borne out by his policies after gaining power. There is little controversy over the considerable support Hitler drew from the aristocrats, the military, or the Junkers.

Telltale signs forewarning of the elite control was evident from the very formation of the party until the final days before gaining power. A brief look at those that financed the Nazis rise to power will reveal the real support behind Hitler. This is becoming an increasing issue of contention as American hard right tries to distance themselves from the similarities of their policies with fascism.

Hitler himself did not form the Nazi party initially. He joined an existing party and then molded it according to his wishes. In fact, his company commander had ordered him to attend a meeting of what was the German Workers Party. Here was Hitler's initial reaction to the party.

>"My impression was neither good or bad; a new organization like so many others. This was the time in which anyone who was not satisfied with developments and no longer had confidence in the existing parties felt called upon to found a new party. Everywhere these organizations sprang from the ground, only to vanish silently after a time. The founders for the most part had no idea what it means to make a party---let alone a movement---out of a club. And so these organizations nearly always stifle automatically in their absurd phillistinism."16

The order from his company commander provides the first evidence that the elite backed Hitler from the very beginning. At any point from this date the German military could have withdrawn its support of Hitler and disbanded the Nazi party

Hitler was a good orator by all reports, as well as an astute political observer. He knew how to motivate the masses in his name and how to sustain a movement. Someone once remarked recently that you needed only gain control of the 3Ms to gain power. The three "Ms" are the military, media, and money. Hitler had all three behind him. As shown by the passage from Mein Kampf, Hitler started with the blessing of the military. The military, as well as big business, played a behind the scenes role in the appointment of Hitler as chancellor. It's the last of the 3Ms where much confusion and debate arise, Hitler's source of funds or money.

Big business likewise had a large hand in bringing down Bruning in 1930. In a large part, it was the constant bickering by special interest groups that led to the falling of Bruning's cabinet. Big business was urging the following demands on the Bruning government:

>1. The government must take steps to lower the cost of production and widen the profit margin.
2. Lower taxes

3. Reduce the size of government.
4. Lower unemployment insurance benefit
5. The government must allow wages to progress to lower levels, by voiding labor contracts and binding arbitration.26

If these demands from the business community seem familiar to the reader, it's because in a large part they are the same policies that the Republican Party has been advocating for the last twenty years.

Throughout the 1920s and up until Hitler was appointed chancellor the Nazi party was plagued with a shortage of money. After release for prison for the failed Beer Hall Putsch, Hitler's only known source of income was from the sale of Mein Kampf and fees for newspaper articles he would write. The first edition of Mein Kampf was published July 18, 1925 in an edition of 10,000 copies selling for 12 marks. By the end of the year almost all copies had been sold. A new edition was printed but sales in the following year plummeted.

Nevertheless, almost immediately after being pardoned he bought a new super-charged Mercedes-Benz for 28,000 marks.17 Additionally, Hitler did not drive, so he had the additional expense of a chauffeur.

Likewise, from 1925 until his appointment as chancellor in 1933, Hitler lived in increasing comforts, if not outright lavishness for the times. Certainly, the royalties from Mein Kampf and fees for his other writings were insufficient to cover even his living expenses, not to mention the party's expenses.

Also, the funding for an ever-increasing number of SA troopers (many of which were unemployed) had to be secured. Turner has suggested that the Nazis were self sufficient from dues, speaker's fees, and donations at rallies. However, this seems almost improbable looking at the numbers from 1930. In 1930 there were about 100,000 storm troopers that had to be fed, housed and otherwise supported. Additionally there were 15,000 in the SS. Nazi membership at the beginning of 1931 was only 389,000.18 Thus it seems very reasonable that outside sources of funding was needed to maintain the SA and SS, as well as the ever increasing lifestyle of Hitler. Membership fees in the Nazi party started at a mark per month, non-paying members were quickly dropped from the party.

From the very beginning of the Nazi party Hitler showed a knack for obtaining funding from the more privileged members of German society. For instance, everyone is well aware of the trial following the Beer Hall Putsch, but less well known was a secondary trial following the putsch. In the secondary trial, several businessmen that had donated money or other support for Hitler were put on trial. Some have attributed much of this early funding of the Nazis to the secret Thule Society.19 Another early source of funds in the early 20s came from the efforts of Scheubner-Richter, who was adept at gaining funds from Bavarian aristocrats, big businessmen, bankers, and leaders of heavy industry.20 Another source of early funds came indirectly from Fritz Thyssen. Henry Ford also exerted a considerable influence over Hitler in the early 1920s, as well as money. Some passages from Ford's International Jew are nearly identical to passages in Mein Kampf.

Ford's book is reported to have had a large effect on many of the school children of the time that were suffering through hyperinflation and economic hard times while reading a book written by the world's foremost capitalist.

The extent of Ford's financial donations to Hitler still remains a mystery. The U. S. ambassador to Germany, William Dodd, was quoted saying "certain American industrialists had a great deal to do with bringing fascist regimes into being in both Germany and Italy."21 The extent of corporate America's collaboration with the Nazis before the war and even during the war, in some cases, is not fully known. However, as time goes by and more information becomes available, the collaboration begins to appear significant, as shown in the following article.

"Bernd Greiner said 26 of the top 100 US companies in the 1930s collaborated to some degree with the Nazis before, and in some cases after, Hitler declared war on the United States in December 1941. Company headquarters in the US have denied they knew what was going on in Germany, but there is evidence to suggest they knew their German subsidiaries used slave labor, tolerated it and in some cases were actively involved, Greiner said.

Greiner confirmed a report in the newspaper Die Zeit, based on his findings of US corporate involvement in Nazi Germany. The findings went beyond allegations of US lawyers and historians last year that automakers General Motors and Ford collaborated with the Nazi regime."22

One of the more historically accurate, but shamefully apologetic to big business sources is the book, German Big Business and the Rise of Hitler by Turner.23 Turner does a good job in detailing the extensive participation of the leaders of business with the Nazis. However, he reaches the conclusion that big business did not support Hitler with a rather contrived definition of what big business is. He based his definition on the value of the float of stock on the market. His definition limited the number of companies that he would classify as big business to only 14 companies in the Ruhr industrial area and a smattering of companies located elsewhere. Essentially, his definition would be the equivalent of saying that only the Dow 30 companies in the U. S. could truly be called big business. This of course is nonsense. The majority of people would certainly consider Chrysler, Texas Instruments, Hewitt Packard, John Deere and Chase Manhattan Bank to be big business, but according to Turner's book they are not. It is from this group of second and third tier businesses (in keeping with Turner's definition) that provided the most help and support for Hitler. Furthermore, Turner neglects the effect of cartel agreements as well as subsidiaries in his analysis. Many of these second and third tier corporations were owned and controlled by the 14 corporations, he considered to be big business.

Secondly, Turner focuses much of his attention on the period of 1920-1928, when the Nazis were at best a minor noisy party. During this time, the Nazis were lucky to poll more than three percent of the vote. Yet Turner tries to use this as proof that big business did not support Hitler's rise to power, although he does admit that Fritz Thyssen and Kirdolf were supporters of the Nazis during this time. An equivalent situation would be today's Libertarian Party, a party that draws support from Koch, head of Koch refinery (a second tier company by Turner's reasoning). But no one is rushing to fund the Libertarians today when they cannot even poll five percent of the vote.

Finally, when the source of funds were unquestionably from big business Turner attempts to discredit them by claiming the source of the funds was a junior level executive that couldn't be responsible for overall company policy. Or he attempts to say they were given to an individual Nazi. In one shameful passage Turner attempts to discredit the funds given to Nazi fund-raiser Walther Funk by claiming they were not a donation to the party as they may have been spent by Funk for entertainment. Turner describes a particular drunken binge across town by Funk in which he passed out some rather large tips and then draws the conclusion that perhaps none of the funds given Funk ever reached the Nazis.24 This is not the work of a historian, as Turner claims to be. This is nothing more than conjecture by a propagandist. There is also one other speculative conclusion one could draw from this passage, and that is that the amount of money Funk was receiving was so enormous that it permitted such behavior.

Turner does a good job in showing that it was those second and third tier businesses that supported the Nazis. In Duren, a Rhenish manufacturing town, the Nazis received considerable support from local industrialists such as the millionaire dynasties (a term in use from the 1820s in describing these two families) of the Schoellers and the Schulls. Another area in which the Nazis received broad support from businesses was Solingen, an industrial town.25 Overall, Turner documents the participation of business leaders and their support for the Nazis, leaving no question in the reader's mind that business leaders exerted a considerable influence on the Nazis. Unfortunately, he ends his study just as the Nazis seize power.

Many businesses chose to align with and support the Nazis after they gained power. Krupp and I.G. Faben were both executors' of Goring's Four-Year Plan to make Germany militarily self-sufficient by 1940. One can view the details of Krupp's involvement and support for the Nazis after March 1933 in the documents from the War Crimes Tribunal at Nuremberg.31 The full set of available documents from Nuremberg is also available on the Internet.32 By 1939, I.G. Faben provided the Nazis with 90 percent of their foreign exchange, 95 percent of imports, and 85 percent of all military and commercial goods. In 1932, Hermann Schmitz Faben's joint chairman joined forces with Kurt von Schroder, director of a wealthy private bank. Schroder was a fanatical Nazi, often times dressed in his black SS uniform. Schroder is the man that is closely linked with Chase Bank, Standard Oil and William Teagle, and ITT. In 1932, Schroder and Wilhelm Keppler formed the group known as "The Fraternity." This group guaranteed a source of money to the Gestapo. Members agreed to contribute an average of one million marks a year to Himmler's personally marked "S" account and the transferable secret "R" account of the Gestapo.27

In April of 1933, Gustav Krupp sought out a private meeting with Hitler. Krupp agreed to become Hitler's chief fundraiser and chairman of the Adolf Hitler Fund. In return Hitler promised to appoint Krupp as the fuehrer of Germany industry. Over the years, Krupp contributed over six million marks of his own money to the Nazis, and his correspondence shows that he truly enjoyed his job as chairman.28

Likewise, it is common knowledge that after Hitler was appointed chancellor Krupp greeted people cheerfully with the Heil Hitler salutation.

Schirer writes that in 1931, when Hitler decided to cultivate relationships between influential industrial leaders, he kept their identity a secret.

"The party still had to play both sides of the tracks. The party had to allow Strasser, Goebbels and Feder to beguile the masses with socialist talk and denigrating the industrial magnates."

Some of the meetings were so secretive that they were held in forest glades."29

Further proof of the industrialist involvement and support of the Nazis comes from the testimony of Funk at Nuremberg. The entire list implicated by Funk is far too long to reproduce here, but besides Thyssen and Krupp it included Georg von Schnitzler-I.G. Farben, August Rosterg and August Diehn of the potash industry, Cuno of the Hamburg Amerika Line, Otto Wolf, Kurt von Schroder, and many other wealthy industrialists30

On May 2, 1933, the Nazis raided and occupied all trade union headquarters. The leaders were beaten and arrested; some were placed in the concentration camps. Union funds were confiscated and the unions were dissolved. Members of the communist party and the social democrats had already been arrested. On June 20, 1934, in what has become known as the Night of Long Knifes, Hitler purged the socialists within the Nazi party, chief among them Roehm.

With the broad financial support from the leaders of the business community as well as from the military leaders and aristocrats, the Nazis were truly a top down organization, while the Nazis used the lower class as foot soldiers to gain power. They did so in a deceiving manner, and once in power, immediately set about betraying the lower classes

We have already shown one example of divisionism by the Nazis in their rise to power. But what sets fascist divisionism apart from the ordinary divisionism of any other political ideology? Certainly any politician in a democracy appeals to some sort of divisionism, as he is fully aware that he can not possibly appeal to the entire electorate. The difference lies in the fact that divisionism is always destructive in fascism and serves only as a means to gain and maintain power. Even after gaining power, Hitler went to great pains in dividing power, playing one follower against another, creating rivalries in the party in the process. In short, Hitler kept the Nazi party divided as if it was a set of small fiefdoms. One of the biggest myths about the Nazis is that they were a single unit, when in fact they were a conglomeration of various fractured parts. Eatwell states the paradox within Hitler's power structure as: "because the party was so divided that he had power and in turn the party was divided from other key centers of power such as the army." 47 In other ideologies, the divisionism is not inherently destructive. Rather, it's based on differing approaches coming together to reach an equable solution to a problem. In his rise to power, Hitler had no intention of compromising with the other parties to form a parliamentary president. His moves were calculated to destroy any chance of that.

A couple of examples from the present can further delineate the difference between the two. Certainly many of the tax proposals coming from the Republican party today could be classed as divisionism as they favor the upper income earners over the lower income groups. While the measures are divisive they can hardly be labeled as destructive divisionism. They are more a reflection of difference in opinion.

However, an example of an act that could be termed a fascist divisionism was the Republican caused shut down of the government in November 1995 after Clinton vetoed the budget bill. Clinton had previously warned Congress that unless changes were made in the budget he would veto the bill. Members of the hard right Council for National Policy and many of their Republican members openly had declared they would shut down the government. In essence, the Republicans adopted the same policy that Hitler had in his bid to dismiss parliament; they refused to negotiate honorably.

Just as Hitler had taken a position to subvert democracy, so had the Republicans, led by Gingrich. The constitution defines the passing of the budget in detail. The spending bills originate in the House after passage by both the House and the Senate. It is then sent to the President, who may either veto it or sign it. If the bill is vetoed, it is up to Congress and the President to reach a compromise bill. Otherwise, Congress must pass a bill with a two-thirds majority. The failure of Congress to pass a bill to advert a government shutdown was a dereliction of their constitutional duty. Fortunately, the outrage coming from the general public forced the Republicans back to the negotiation table. The point to be made is the only difference between the two events---the Republicans feared the wrath of the people and capitulated, Hitler had no such fear and parliament was dismissed.

The Republican shut down of the government also serves to point out a flaw in our constitution, just as there was a flaw in the German constitution. In the case of the U. S. constitution there is no other mechanism other than shutting down the government if Congress fails to pass a budget. If the fascists in America can be successful in polarizing American politics to such an extent that the public, or at least a considerable portion of it, tolerates a government shut down, then the entire budget process becomes a fracas. And after observing the behavior of the Republicans in their ill fated attempt to impeach

Clinton such a possibility does not appear so remote.
Another example of divisionism that is solely destructive that is not based on racism or class warfare was the impeachment of Bill Clinton. It served no purpose other than to smear the president, the articles of impeachment fell far short of what the founding fathers had defined in the phrase "high crimes and misdemeanors." That phrase refers back to the misuse of offices in England under the king. Additionally, the investigation of Ken Starr has been plagued by civil rights abuse and possible criminal action by Starr himself. It resembles a coup headed by the multi millionaire Scaife with the aid of the religious right, more than it resembled a justified impeachment.
But perhaps, the greatest illustration of the divisionism was seeing support for the impeachment evaporate like rain on hot pavement in the Senate following the State of the Union address and a thorough defense of the charges by Clinton's legal team. The House prosecutors with the conclusion of Ken Starr questioned Monica Lewinsky further in secret. This single action by the House Republicans invoked criticism from even members of their own party in the Senate. It was conducted against the agreed upon rules, and it was unconstitutional in that the power of investigation is delegated to the Senate. Likewise, it is against the statute of the Independent Council. It served no purpose other than to further divide and disgust the country. In short, it is nothing but an attempt at a power play.
Often times, this divisionism takes the form of racism or class warfare. It is often stated that Mussolini tried to eliminate class distinctions in fascist Italy. But the reality is that he only reinforced those distinctions. Certainly the Nazis practiced racism in an outrageous manner, ending in the Holocaust. On the other hand, fascist Italy was not racist in nature until after Mussolini adopted Hitler's Jewish solution. Fascism doesn't necessary have to be racist in nature, but racism is often used to divide the citizens, as their radical platform isn't appealing to the broad masses. In addition, racism is violent in nature and the resulting chaos from the violence serves to further divide the masses. Whether or not a fascist state is racist seems to depend more upon the culture of the society in which it arises. Before fascism, Italy had a long history of generally equable racial relationships, going all the way back to the old Roman Empire. For instance, even the slaves were eventually given full rights in Rome. However, the roots of anti-Semitism goes back much further in Germany as shown in the following quote.
"This is a good month to reflect on the toxicity of words meant to kill. Nov. 9 marks the 60th anniversary of Kristallnacht, the 1938 'Night of Shattered Glass' unleashed by the Nazis to terrorize Germany's Jews. The date was chosen specially by Josef Goebbels, Hitler's propagandist, to honor the birthday of Martin Luther, the 16th century monk who was a father of the protestant Reformation and the founder of what became the Lutheran church.
Hitler greatly admired Luther: "He saw the Jew as we are only beginning to see him today." Indeed. Luther saw the Jews as 'hopeless, wicked, venomous, and devilish... our pest, torment, and misfortune.' Initially, certain that his version of Christianity would appeal to Jews, he expected large numbers of them to covert. When that failed to happen, he turned violently against them. In 1543, Luther Published "On the Jews and Their Lies," a work that would become known throughout Germany, perhaps the most widely disseminated work of anti-Semitism by a German until the rise of the Nazis 400, years later.

"What then shall we Christians do with this damned, rejected race of Jews?" Luther asked.
"First, their synagogues should be set on fire, and whatever does not burn up should be covered or spread over with dirt, so that no one may ever be able to see a cinder or stone of it...
Secondly, their homes should likewise be broken down and destroyed...
Thirdly, they should be deprived of their prayer books and Talmuds, in which such idolatry, lies, cursing, and blasphemy are taught.
Fourthly, their rabbis must be forbidden under threat of death to teach any more...
Fifthly, passports and traveling privileges should be absolutely forbidden to the Jews...
Sixthly, I advise that...all cash and treasure of silver and gold be taken from them...
Burn down their synagogues, forbid all that I enumerated earlier, force them to work, and deal harshly with them... If this does not help we must drive them out like mad dogs, so we do not become partakers of their abominable blasphemy and all their other vices. I have done my duty. Now let everyone see to his."
This is hate speech.
< Sixty years ago next Monday on the night of Luther's birthday, Nazi gangs rampaged across Germany. In every Jewish neighborhood, windows were smashed and buildings were torched. All told, 101 synagogues were destroyed, and nearly 7,500 Jewish-owned businesses were demolished.
On that night, 91 Jews were murdered; 26,000 were rounded up and sent to concentration camps. It was the greatest pogrom in history. And it was nothing compared with what was to come."33
The question then remains whether the fascism in America can be considered racist or not. The past history of racism in the United States would tend to support such. As a nation, we was one of the last industrial nations to allow slavery, and it took the Civil War to end slavery. It has been less than fifty years since "separate but equal" was the rule of the land. It's only been sixty years since Japanese citizens and immigrants were interred in camps following the bombing of Pearl Harbor. The Rosewood incident happened less than a hundred years ago, and lynching of blacks was common well into the 20th century. This country has had a long, incredulous history of bigotry and even genocide. There is no question of the genocide of Native Americans in the efforts of the U. S. Army in passing out blankets infected with small pox, or the slaughter of the Plains Indian's primary source of food, the buffalo. Then there was the Trail of Tears, as well. The Irish immigrants, following the potato famine, were greeted by the Know Nothings, a party that based its support on the hate of Catholics.

All of the hard right groups are racist, although more than one tries to play their racism down or to hide it, such as the John Birch Society and some of the various militia groups. Others are openly racists, such as the Klan, the Nazis and the skinheads. The great unifier of the far right, the Identity religion, links many of the hard right groups. The Identity religion is based on anti-Semitic belief that the true followers of Jesus immigrated to Britain and northern Europe, that today's Jews are the descendents of Satan. It's the mainstay religion among the militias, the Posse Comitatus, and even among some of the Klan groups.

Besides the normal hate groups based on racism or anti-Semitism. the religious right has emerged in the 1990s as a venomous hate group basing their hate on gays and abortion. Abortion clinics increasingly are becoming targets of bombings, arson, and vandalism. Late in 1998, Matthew Shepard was murdered in Wyoming after being tie to a fence and then pistol whipped, for being gay. Below are some quotes about gays from one of the leaders of the religious right, Pat Robertson.

"This conduct [homosexuality] is anti-social, and it is a pathology. It is a sickness, and it needs to be treated. It doesn't need to be taught in the classroom as a preferred way of life..." - 700 Club, 3-7-90

"...the acceptance of homosexuality is the last step in the decline of Gentile civilization." --Pat Robertson, of the Christian Broadcasting Network, warned that hurricanes could hit Orlando, Fla., because of gay events there. Time magazine, Oct 26, 1998

"If the world accepts homosexuality as its norm and if it moves the entire world in that regard, the whole world is then going to be sitting like Sodom and Gomorrah before a Holy God. And when the wrath of God comes on this earth, we will all be guilty and we will all suffer for it." - 700 Club, 9-6-9534

Compare that last quote of Robertson's to the following quote of Hitler on syphilis.

"...they speak of this whole field as if it were a great sin, and above all express their profound indignation against every sinner caught in the act, then close their eyes in pious horror to this godless plague and pray God to let sulfur and brimstone preferably after their own death rain down on this Sodom and Gomorrah, thus once making an instructive example of this shameless humanity."39

Such evidence, as Robertson's words, abounds that they would persecute gays, it abounds in the numerous ballot measures in various states that would deny gays their civil rights. Such a measure passed in Colorado, only to be overturned by the Supreme Court. Another measure, led by Lon Mabon in Oregon failed state wide, but was reintroduced on local ballots in the following election. Mabon has also led ballot measures to limit the concept of a family and limiting abortions to only the first trimester. The first was another attempt to limit the rights of gays.

In June 1998, near Jasper, Texas a black man named James Byrd was dragged behind a pickup. Body parts were found over a two mile length of the roadway.35 It is too early for trends in hate crimes to emerge, as the FBI only began tracking hate crimes in 1991. The one trend that does seem to be emerging is the hate crimes are becoming increasingly violent as evident from the murders of Shepard and Byrd. The real danger of these two murders is they serve to desensitize us, leading to more numerous and increasing levels of violence, just as the Nazis used increasing levels of violence against the Jews.

Racism is reemerging in various forms in the 1990s in political issues and in the Republican Party. "English only" laws are being promoted with increasing frequency by various Republican candidates, including Robert Dole, and have even appeared on some ballot measures such as California Prop 187. The obvious targets are immigrants from Mexico. In effect, its nothing more than the reemergence of nativism. Other forms of nativism have appeared, such as denying immigrants access to welfare and the school system for children of immigrants. Nativism is also behind various immigration bills and the increasing efforts directed at illegals.

Perhaps the most dangerous form of racism to emerge has been the Republican efforts to 'monitor' the polls. And videotape those leaving. Cases have arisen in the 1998 election in North Carolina, Georgia, Michigan, Maryland, Kentucky, Texas and Maine. The efforts are directed primarily at districts in which have a high percentage of minorities. Such efforts serve no useful purpose and do constitute a violation of the Voting Rights Act.36 More disturbing is the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, William Rehnquist, served as the director of Republican 'ballot security' in the poor areas of Phoenix, Arizona between 1958-1962.37 He likewise wrote a pro separate but equal memo as a law clerk for Justice Robert Jackson. All of which was brought out in his confirmation hearings.

An even more subtle effort on the part of Republicans in denying votes to the minorities and the poor is centered on the debate to allow a statistical correction to the 2000 census. Such effort on the part of the Republicans goes far beyond the election of 2000. The census will be used to reapportionment of the congressional districts for the decade. Thus, by denying the correction, they in effect are perpetuating their power to 2010 by undercounting groups that historically vote for Democrats n Dec 1998, Republican House member Bob Barr and Senator Trent Lott were exposed as keynote speakers before the Council of Conservative Citizens, a racist organization. Lott was later determined to have been an honorary member and had written several articles for their paper dating back to the early 1990s. In January, Republican National Chairman, Jim Nicholson asked members to dissociate themselves from this group and directly appealed to national committee member Buddy Witherspoon from South Carolina to resign. The request was refused.38 Once before, the Republicans were asked to denounce the radical John Birch Society at their National Convention in the early 1960s.

Moderate members such as the former President Jerry Ford, did so.
However the measure failed.
>Another Republican that deserves mention here is Pat Buchanan and his anti-Semitic views. Buchanan has opposed virtually all civil rights bills and favorable court decisions; he has supported apartheid in South Africa; he has spewed forth views of Holocaust denial; he has called fascists such as Franco and Pinochet soldier-patriots. And Buchanan was a key figure in urging Reagan to visit the SS cemetery in Bitburg.40
Thus as we prepare to enter a new century, the Republican Party has adopted racism as a divisionist tool to divide the electorate in an attempt to maintain power and enact their extremist agenda. Not all members of the Republican Party are racist, but many of the members from the hard right that controls the party are racists. There are honorable members of the party, but they are being forced into lesser and lesser roles. The extremists have gained control. It is the burden of those honorable members to take back control of their party and denounce the extremist before it becomes too late.
Perhaps the best assessment of the use of destructive divisionism by fascist in the United States comes from a 1945 War department publication:
"Three Ways to Spot U.S. Fascists.
Fascists in America may differ slightly from fascists in other countries, but there are a number of attitudes and practices that they have in common. Following are three. Every person who has one of them is not necessarily a fascist. But he is in a mental state that lends itself to the acceptance of fascist aims.
1.Pitting religion, racial, and economic groups against one another in order to break down the national unity is a device of the divide and conquer technique used by Hitler to gain power in Germany and in other countries. With slight variations, to suit local conditions, fascists everywhere have used this Hitler method. In many countries, anti-Semitism is a dominant devise of fascism. In the United States native fascists have often been anti-Catholic, anti-Jew, anti-Negro, anti-Labor and anti-foreign born. In South America native fascists use the same scapegoats except that they substitute anti-Protestantism for anti-Catholicism.
Interwoven with the master race theory of fascism is a well planned hate campaign against minority races, religions, and other groups. To suit their particular needs and aims, fascists will use any one or a combination of such groups as a convenient scapegoat.
2. Fascism cannot tolerate such religious and ethical concepts as the brotherhood of man. Fascists deny the need for international cooperation. These ideas contradict the fascist theory of the master race. The color, race, creed or nationality-have rights. International cooperation, as expressed in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, run counter to the fascist program of war and world domination. Right now our native fascists are spreading anti-British, anti-Soviet, anti-French and anti-United nations propaganda.
3. It is accurate to call a member of a communist party a communist. For short, he is often called a Red. Indiscriminate pinning of the label Red on people and proposals which one opposes is a common political device. It is a favorite trick of native as well as foreign fascists.

Many fascists make the spurious claim that the world has but two choices---either fascism or communism and they label as communist everyone who refuses to support them. By attacking our free enterprise, capitalist democracy and by deny the effectiveness of our way of life they hope to trap many people."74

The extreme anti-communism and anti-socialism stance of the fascist is beyond dispute among honest historians. Both communists and socialists were the first to enter the concentration camps in Nazi Germany. Both Mussolini and Franco fought against communist influence. From the brief survey of the fascist philosophers and extreme anti-liberal stance has been a factor in fascism from the beginning. The Nazi used socialism as a ruse to gain power, but once in power they purged the socialists within their party. The following quotes taken from Mein Kampf will illuminate the anti-communism, anti-parliamentary democracy, and the social darwinism of Hitler.
"Just as in 1918 we paid with our blood for the fact that in 1914 and 1915 we did not proceed to trample the head of Marxist serpent once and for all, we would have to pay most catastrophically if in the spring of 1923 we did not avail ourselves of the opportunity to halt the activity of the Marist traitors and murders of the nation for good"41 >
"As regards the possibility of putting these ideas into practice, I beg you not to forget that the parliamentary principle of democratic majority rule has by no means always dominated mankind, but to the contrary is to be found only in brief periods of history, which are always epochs of decay of peoples and states."42
"The best state constitution and state form is that which, with the most unquestioned certainty, raises the best minds in the national community to leading position and leading influence.
But as in economic life, the able men cannot be appointed from above, but must struggle through for themselves,..."43
The second quote certainly is anti-liberal as it shows Hitler's contempt for the democratic process. The last quote reveals Hitler as a social Darwinist of which Turner makes the point in several places in his book.44 Social Darwinism runs counter to the aims of socialism. In fact it is the antithesis. It allows the elite to gain further power, it willingly discards the poor and the weak as expendables.
With the anti-communism stance and social Darwinism character of Hitler, it is not surprising that the fascist in America would come from the extreme right. The United States was right in opposing communism. But to what links? As with anything else moderation is an admirable quality, excesses of any nature are damaging. Truman or Eisenhower were not fascists for their anti-communism actions. However, Tail Gunner Joe was either a fascist or a willing dupe of fascists. The type of anti-communism of McCarthy served no other purpose than to further his political career. He openly violated the right to free speech and assembly of his victims. His aim was to destroy them with out any regard to the evidence.

The social Darwinism as initiated by Reagan and his attacks on the poor, and the dismantling of the welfare program led by Newt Gingrich will also be labeled as examples of creeping fascism. Throwing people into the streets arbitrarily to fend for themselves is destructive; it is social Darwinism at its worst. Forcing them to except wages below the minimum wage law is denying them their equal rights. But it was precisely the economic woes of Germany that allowed the Nazis to rise to power. Currently America is enjoying good economic times, but when the economy takes a turn to the south the full impact of the lack of a social safety net is going to be felt hard.
The next trait of fascism, extreme exploitation, is a direct result of one of the primary traits of fascism, extreme nationalism. The form of nationalism promoted by fascism not only concerns the standing in the world but also applies to the sacrifices that are expected of citizens. In short, the fascist state reigns supreme while the individuals are subordinate to the state. The subordination of individuals to the state is the antithesis of liberalism. Once again some quotes from Mein Kampf will suffice.
"Since for us the state as such is the only form, but the essential is its content, the nation, the people, it is clear that everything else must be subordinated to its sovereign interests."45
"a peace, supported not by the palm branches of tearful, pacifist female mourners, but based on the victorious sword of a master people, putting the world into the service of a higher culture."46
Certainly from those two quotes there can be no question of the subordination of individuals as practiced under the Nazis or to any limits short of world domination by the Nazis. It is often stated that Hitler left a road map to his future goals in Mein Kampf. There is no greater evidence of that than in the last quote. How then did he rise to power? The problem was nobody was listening. Nobody challenged his aggressive views toward war, or at best they believed that they could control or contain him. Only later did they find out the errors of that false assumption.
This writer can find only two instances of this extreme exploitation in America. Thanks to the efforts of CBS 60 Minutes and Evening News, the story broke about the Tomb of the Unknown and how the Reagan White House pressured the military to find an unknown to bury on Memorial Day 1984. Turns out that in their haste to respond to the pressure coming from the White House, they deliberately buried a fallen soldier that wasn't so unknown. The unknown was Michael Bassie. This man had given everything to his country except for his name. And the lowlife filth occupying the White House had that stripped from him so he could have a photo op on Memorial Day in an election year. This writer can think of no other action that is more despicable; it's unforgivable.
Of course Reagan made sure he was the star of this photo op and used it to promote and build support for his extremist military agenda.
The second instance comes at the hands of Newt Gingrich and the Republicans of the 104th and 105th Congress. They have stripped the rights of welfare recipients and required that they participate in workfare. The problem comes in that these poor souls are not even entitled to be paid the minimum wage or the right to unionize in some cases. In other words, the Republican's answer to the poor is to force the to work in perpetual slavery with no chance of ever breaking out of poverty.

But this event is much more dangerous and goes much further than it appears. The danger here lies in the suspension of the constitutional equality under the eyes of the law. The Republicans have in effect created a sub-class in which one of the very fundamental tenets of our constitution, equality under the eyes of the law was ignored and thrown out the window. Nor is this the only example of unequal treatment of the poor at the hands of the Republicans. They also have advocated cut backs in the budget for the public defender's office. The Republicans have been very successful in their propaganda in demonizing the poor. There seems to be an almost gutter level hatred of the poor and any aid to assist them. Instead of reaching out a compassionate helping hand towards the poor, the Republicans have adopted a mean spirited social Darwinist view.

This brings us to the trait of opportunistic ideology of fascism. It is perhaps one of the more confusing aspects of fascism. Mussolini appears to have been indeed a socialist before founding the fascist party. Mussolini likewise went from a pacifist to a rabid warmonger. Clearly such dramatic changes in ideology could only be based in an opportunistic grab for power. Mussolini started supporting a syndicalism economy, but by 1923, with clear objections from business leaders, he concluded the Palazzo Chigi Pact. This pact's main intent was to simplify business relations by making the fascist the sole representative of labor. In 1925, the Plazzo Vidoni agreement was signed. This agreement made Rossoni's union the sole representative of labor. It likewise prohibited the challenging of factory management. By the close of the year, the grateful employer's federation publicly announced adherence to the fascist regime.48 Such transformations illistrate the opportunistic ideology present in fascism or is it a lack of ideology, as well as further dispeling the myth that fascism is another form of socialism.

Part of the problem with the ever-changing ideology of fascism arises from the divisionism. Strasser was a socialist and it seems that Goebbels was a Marxist. Both were allowed almost free reign in promoting their own economic views as long as it gathered more support of serve Hitler's purpose. But once their views failed to serve Hitler, they were then brow beaten severely. An example of such reversal in party ideology of the Nazis occurred on February 14,1926. Prior to this date, both Strasser and Goebbels had approved of a plebiscite campaign to deprive former royalty of their possessions, a measure, that was popular with the common citizens. On the given date, Hitler summoned both men to a meeting in Bamberg. Before those gathered, Hitler forced both to capitulate and abandon the program.49

Similar events have already been given, in which various Nazis were initially allowed to promote socialism in efforts to appease the lower classes in an effort to gain their support.
Examples abound throughout the history of the Nazis where they adopted their ideology to suit the audience. In October 1932, Strasser announced a new program that was a stark reversal of the program the Nazis had advocated in July. Higher taxes on the rich had been replaced with a general reduction of taxes, instead of price controls it centered on freeing prices. Instead of protectionism trade policy, export and global trade was now promoted. Likewise, much of the inflammatory rhetoric had been dropped.50
Hitler seems to have sensed the explosive nature of economics and tried to avoid the subject both publicly and within the party. From all indications, he was dissatisfied with the party planks on economic matters. The only official stance on economic matters was the 1920 twenty-five point program. However, he only referred to this policy document disparagingly in Mein Kampf and distanced himself from the document.51 Likewise Hitler would never take an aggressive stance on minor issues, he played to his audience to win their support.
Perhaps the most dramatic evidence of the opportunistic character of the Nazis is illustrated by the actions of thirty-nine businessmen in November 1932. The group contained such notables as Krupp, Thyssen, Bosch, Siemens, and others. In a signed letter to Hindenburg they urged him to appoint Hitler as chancellor. In essence they were placing a bet that the socialism ideology was a fraud and that once in power he would be a tool of capitalist.52
The only other reversal in policy that could rival the bet that the leaders of big business made was Hitler's writings. In the first part of Mein Kampf he argued that France was the sworn and greater enemy of Germany. However, the second part to Mein Kampf he reversed course and argued that Russia was the enemy as opposed to the first book in which he proposed an alliance with Russia.53 This was a complete change in his foreign policy. One can only speculate as to the reasons behind such a switch.
Many writers have tried to label the Nazis as socialists in a folly to distance themselves from fascist theory. They are quick to point to the syndicalism policy as proof of socialist regulation of business. They are in error, of course. Syndicalism is neither left nor right in itself. It can be either, depending upon the political structure. Syndicalism with labor groups or consumers dominating the issues would indeed be socialistic in nature. On the other hand, syndicalism with only industry or business groups dominating is certainly from the right wing of the political spectrum. The issuing of controls or goals over the production of war material by the government in a syndicalism system is neither left nor right, it's simply self-preservation. The goals and controls, including the 4-Year Plan issued by Goring, were nothing more than gearing the economy up for war time production. In essence, they were merely self-preservation measures. > that were implemented under the Nazis as examples of socialism. An example of this is the construction of the autobahn, a project that had been planned by previous governments, as were many of the public work projects. They likewise forget that the Nazis took over at the bottom of an economic depression, public work projects were enacted not only in Germany, but in the U. S. as well as a means to end the depression. Many of those projects in the U. S. were the construction of useful infrastructure, such as the building of the high school in New Ulm, Minnesota. Others had a definite commercialism bent to them, such as the construction of Timberline Lodge on Mount Hood in Oregon. Labeling the construction of a facility for a commercial business as socialism is simply fools folly. The same applies to many of the public works projects that were implemented under the Nazis.

Labeling such programs as socialism would be the same as labeling the construction of the interstate highway system as socialism. If the Eisenhower administration had one shinning moment, it was his support for the construction of the freeway system. For those that are silly enough to label such work as socialism, let them be reminded that no other single event, other than the construction of the cross continental railroad aided the development of business. Besides the obvious advantage to shippers, the interstate highway system has spawned many new businesses. Think of the number of motels/hotels as well as the tourist traps, service stations, and others that have grown up along the freeway system. The same applies to Germany and the autobahn.
Finally, the same writers that label fascism as socialism would like their readers to believe that these government regulations and bureaucratic offices held ultimate power. Failure to comply would result in the owners being shot. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Nazis for a large part lived in fear of the leaders of big business. They were aware that they had no comprehensive economic plan and would defer to the judgement of the business leaders.
This point can be driven home with one simple example. Goering was one of the Nazis that had little economic knowledge, but harbored some of the more radical economic ideas and was fond of using regulatory offices. Goering tried first to persuade the steel industry, both the smelters and miners, to use low-grade German ore as opposed to the high-grade Swedish ore. Importation of ore from Sweden would use up precious foreign currency, as well as being a less reliable source in the event of war. The invasions of Denmark and Norway were conducted solely to protect the Nazis shipping routes for the Swedish ore. Most of the industrialists politely refused Goering's request; even under threats of arrest for sabotage, they still declined.54 None were arrested for refusal. Instead Goering formed the Herman Goering Works to take on the task. By the time of the outbreak of the war it had evolved to be one of the largest companies in Germany.
Farben is another example of the Nazis bowing to the expertise of leading corporations. With the advent of the first 4-Year Plan, they realized they needed the cooperation of business leadership in order to achieve self-sufficiency in a series of raw materials and finished products. Most of which were items would be crucial to wartime production. By the end of the war Farben, had a series of factories around concentration camps, were major users of slave labor, along with Krupp and many other corporations.

But the most damning evidence of the Nazi's unbridled corporatism was evident shortly after passage of the Enabling Act, when Hjalmar Schacht was appointed president of the Reichsbank. Schacht was a brilliant financier who helped negotiate the Dawes Plan and was largely responsible for stabilizing the currency in 1923; he also detested democracy and parliamentarianism. His first official act was the creation of Metall-Forschungsgesellschaft A.G. (Mefo), a dummy corporation of four armament firms. The state assumed the liability for their debts. The Mefo bills were not unlike promissory notes, they were issued to government contractors and could be extended to five years.55 Such favoritism of business is certainly not socialism. Today in America such corporate aid is labeled as corporate welfare. Note the similarity here not only to the present corporate welfare that's being doled out, but also to Eisenhower's warning of the military-industrial complex. The American military-industrial complex didn't need to invent a new plan, they were simply free to follow the example the Nazis used. In fact fascism is inseparatable from corporatism. You simply cannot have a fascist government without corporations and a capitalistic economy.
Schacht was later appointed to minister of economics in 1934, a post he retained until he resigned in 1937 over policy disputes. He was not an anti-Semitic and was conscious of the negative aspects of the takeover of Jewish business on both the economy and world opinion. By 1936, he was advocating slowing down the rearmament program, fearing the return of inflation.56 The return of inflation dispenses with the myths that the Nazis maintained strict control of corporations and the prices of goods in short order. In effect, such controls were non-existent. It should also be pointed out here that the economy at this time had taken on considerable shades of a consumer economy.
Italy used their form of syndicalism to eliminate labor unions; the Nazis followed a similar path. The workers benefited little from this unbridled corporatism. Unemployment went from an official figure of six million unemployed in 1933, to 2.7 million in 1937, and by the time of the outbreak of war there was a serious shortage of workers. But growth in wages was far less spectacular, real wages rose only sparingly. The index of wages rose from 92.5 in 1933 to 103 in 1937, an increase of a meager eleven-percent.57 Much of the increase in wages was achieved only from working longer hours. The only real increases in the plight of the workers came with more unpaid leave. Many of the other benefits produced no real benefits to the worker, such as the factory beautification program.
From looking at the philosophers of fascism, it was revealed that fascism was a reactionary movement. What then was the fascist reacting to that led to the rise of Mussolini and Hitler? Many people responding to the question would simply answer the Treaty of Versailles. But such an answer is only partially correct. It doesn't account for the widespread rise of fascism in many European countries following WWI. In fact, during the period between the two world wars, every government from the Rhine to the Pacific underwent drastic changes. In many of those fascism had ample support but in the end was rejected. Some of the problem can be laid to the beginning dissolution of the British Empire and the arbitrary way in which maps were redrawn following WWI without regard to ethnic or natural barriers. An example would be the cobbled mess of ethnic groups that formed the former republic of Yugoslavia, an area that remains a hot spot today.

Britain and the United States were about the only two governments that did not undergo a major change during the period between the wars. However, neither was immune to the rise of fascism. The U. S. saw a rise of a great many fascist groups and groups closely aligned with the fascist in the period between the wars. The German Bund, the Silver Shirts and the mother's movement were all aligned closely with fascism. It was also this period that seen the greatest membership in the Ku Klux Klan.
The United States avoided full-blown fascism by essentially adopting fascist methods on a milder scale. This was a shameful period in the history of America. The infamous Palmer raids rounded up those with communist connections. The I.W.W was harassed constantly by Hoover and the FBI. In short, only those with non-approved political beliefs would be prosecuted. This suppression of liberty had actually begun around 1900. At the turn of the century, both conservative and liberal elements combined to pass a blizzard of new laws. This effort aimed at curbing lawless quickly became dominated by conservative elements and evolved in a tool for the right wing for the remainder of the century.
As head of the FBI, Hoover quickly targeted the leaders of the left for prosecution, ignoring the criminal actions of the hard right groups. This has left the United States without any noticeable left wing compared to the rest of the industrial world.
Perhaps one of the first and most notable events was the trial of Sacco and Vanzetti, two immigrants charged with murder in Massachusetts. They were found guilty more on their political beliefs than on evidence. They were anarchists, atheists, and reportedly draft dodgers, beliefs that threatened the industrialists of the time.64
Both were executed after considerable protest. Their trial set a dangerous standard that people could be prosecuted for their political beliefs. The inclusion of this trial here is to serve as a reminder of a new problem that is emerging to confront the hard right, jury nullification. Today there is considerable debate from both sides of the political spectrum on jury nullification arising in death penalty and drug cases. It warrants close observation. If the public becomes too polarized, it could spell the end to the trial by jury system, which has served admirably for over 200 years.
Various members of the right wing are now using this as an issue in another attempt to polarize the electorate for their own selfish purposes. These members of the right wing are promoting a system of justice backed by mob or vigilante justice. Essentially, it's a system backed by violence that is not unlike the tactics used by the Posse Comitatus, the Freemen, or various militias to corrupt the justice system.

The first example of political repression came in Minnesota. The then Republican Governor Burnquist used the newly created Minnesota Commission of Public Safety to suspend New Ulm's Mayor Fritsche and City Attorney Pfaender for their pacifist views after war had been declared on Germany in 1917. The following quote details some of the shameful actions taken by the commission and its connection to the hard right.

In April 1917, soon after America declared war on Germany, the Minnesota Legislature, following ferocious debate, created the Minnesota Commission of Public Safety. This remarkable body, chaired and appointed by the governor, was given "all necessary power" to maintain order and enhance Minnesota's contribution to the war effort. Technically limited by the state and federal constitutions, the commission essentially wielded all the authority of state government during the 18 months of its active existence. >

The commission came to be dominated by representatives of the Twin Cities business community. It used its sweeping authority with gusto, not only to root out ``disloyalty'' but to combat labor unionism and agrarian activism as well.

The commission dispatched detectives throughout Minnesota to investigate people and organizations suspected of disloyalty. It regulated food prices and the liquor trade, imposing prohibition in some parts of the state. It banned union organizing and intervened on the side of management in a bitter Twin Cities streetcar strike. It created a ``Home Guard'' of some 8,000 troops to back up its decrees. The commission served as a virtual campaign committee for Republican Gov. Joseph Burnquist in his 1918 re-election bid. It turned a blind eye toward frequent mob harassment of his opponents. It interrogated and intimidated Minnesotans who declined to purchase Liberty Bonds to finance the war effort.63

Nor was such action confined to just Minnesota, many states set up similar commissions. State sponsored violence against leaders from the left was common place. One group that suffered immeasurably was the I.W.W, the Wobblies. On Nov 5, 1916, Washington State suffered its bloodiest labor battle of all time. The resulting carnage between a local sheriff and the Wobblies left seven dead and over fifty wounded in the city of Everett.65

All three of these events illustrate that the United States repressed those with radical ideas in the time period of WWI and immediately thereafter. Pacifist, labor leaders, and leftist political leaders were all prosecuted with equal zeal. Remember, this was the time period of the Rosewood incident and other atrocities. The prosecution was lead by the hard right and business leaders.

But the real answer to the question is that fascism following WWI was a reaction to the Bolshevik revolution and the rise of liberalism ideals. Up until the Russian revolution, the only economic system was capitalism. Communism was a new revolutionary system. It threatened the power elite directly and gave way to a rise not only in communism but socialism and liberalism as well. It was no accident that fascism arose first in Italy, where in the period of 1919-1922, socialists ruled in many localities. Here fascism arose in the countryside were old practices such as sharecropping were giving way to new methods. In 1920, the largest strike in Italian agriculture ever was settled when the landowners capitulated. Elsewhere, unions were wringing out concessions from the owners through strikes and boycotts.58

The real appeal of European fascism was the protection it afforded against working class movements, socialism, and communism.59 Hobsbawm states it even more forcefully in claiming that without the October revolution and Leninism there would have been no need for fascism. For up until that time, the demagogic right, although politically active and noisy in many countries, had been kept in check.60 The entire Nazi movement was a reactionary movement. The reaction to the Treaty of Versailles is well known and needs no further comment, as is the opposition of fascism to liberalism, socialism and communism. Rather, the following quote will show how complete the reaction was to the events of the time.
"Today Christians... stand at the head of Germany... I pledge that I never will tie myself to parties who want to destroy Christianity...We want to fill our culture again with the Christian spirit... We want to burn out all the recent immoral developments in literature, in the theater, and in the press- in short, we want to burn out the poison of immorality which has entered into our whole life and culture as a result of liberal excess during the past...few years."61 <
The quote above was taken from a speech delivered by Hitler. It provides the illustration that the Nazi movement was completely a reactionary movement, reacting not only to global power politics and the rise of the left, but also to the changes in arts and culture of the time. It also provides the link to demonstrate that today's hard right movement in the U. S. is equally reactionary, in particular, the element of the so-called religious right. Contrast it with the quote by Pat Robertson below.
"The Constitution of the United States, for instance, is a marvelous document for self-governmentby Christian people. But the minute you turn the document into the hands of non-Christian and atheistic people they can use it to destroy the very foundation of our society."-Pat Robertson (The 700 Club, Dec. 30, 1981)62
Apparently, Robertson is under the impression that the constitution applies to only those he chooses and is null and void for the rest of us. Hitler held a similar contempt for democracy. However, the point that the Nazis were reactionary has been established beyond any doubt. The reaction was not just confined to the global political scene or economic conditions, but extended into the very roots of the culture.

Starting around 1980, fascism reared its ugly head globally. Unlike the rise of fascism in the 1920s, this time the Reagan administration embraced it. The administration openly promoted class warfare, allowed the LaRocuhians access to security and intelligence agencies, filled the EPA with Coor's lackeys, and openly supported none but the elite. In essence, the Reagan administration was the American equivalent of the passage of the Enabling Act.

There is no need to expand on the violent behavior of the Nazis or fascists, as there is no dispute of their long history of violence. Instead, the violence of various groups in the United States will be explored. Many readers will immediately think of the violence that arose in the 60s during the war protests. In fact, that is the great illusion of the media. The truth is that little violence was directly attributed to war protestors. In fact much of the violence that did come out of the war protests was the work of the FBI.

The real story of violence in the 60s was the violence inflicted upon the civil rights workers by the Klan. The early part of the 60s was marred by violence, inspired by the Klan and racial hatred of right wing groups. Eisenhower had to use National Guards to integrate the Little Rock school system. Kennedy had to use federal marshals to integrate Old Miss. When the Supreme Court order that busing was to be used as a tool for integration, the violence spread nationally. The Klan burnt school busses in Michigan to prevent integration.

Since 1980, right wing groups such as the Order, which murdered the Denver talk show host, Berg, likewise have dominated the violence. The leader of the Order was killed in a shoot out with law enforcement. Another right wing group, the Posse Comitatus became a household word only after the Kahl shoot out with law enforcement in North Dakota. And of course there was the bombing of the Oklahoma federal building by the right winger McVeigh. Perhaps the greatest widespread use of violence since the Klan has been the bombing and violence directed against abortion clinics by members of the religious right.

Violence has been the hallmark of the hard right in America dating back at least as far as the Know Nothing Party in the 1800s and their hatred of Catholics. It was business leaders that hired Pinkertons to murder union organizers in earlier times. Yet there is relatively little in the way to support that left wing groups were equally violent. Groups like the Weathermen were violent, but the group was never more than a small fringe group. Its extremely small size limited the extent of its violence. One of the reasons for the lack of widespread violence from leftist groups has already been mentioned, the suppression of left wing groups by the FBI.

The last two traits of fascism will be explored together, as they are related by an underlying use of symbols and the inseparable nature of cults and religions. There is no doubt that both Hitler and Mussolini were in effect leaders of a cult. Their extremist views would rule out a major following otherwise. In fact, both promoted imagines consistent with cults. Both chose to use propaganda to promote larger than life imagines of themselves. Both Hitler and Mussolini were Catholics; neither appeared to be particularly active members of the church. Hitler referred to Christianity throughout Mein Kampf, as already shown by quotes of which a few more will be included here.

"The sword will become our plow, and from the tears of war the daily bread of future generations will grow."
"The more the linguistic Babel corroded and disorganized parliament, the closer drew the inevitable hour of the disintegration of this Babylonian Empire and with it the hour of freedom for my German-Austria people."
< " the Lord's grace smiled on his ungrateful children." > Officially, the Nazis were a Christian group, if one can assign a religion to the group by the public policies they enacted. In this case, the assignment is based on the following prayer that the Nazis required to be recited in all public schools.
"Almighty God, dear heavenly Father. In Thy name let us now, in pious spirit, begin our instruction. Enlighten us, teach us all truth, strengthen us in all that is good, lead us not into temptation, deliver us from all evil in order that, as good human beings, we may faithfully perform our duties and thereby, in time and eternity, be made truly happy. Amen."67
It is also true that the Nazis dabbled in mysticism as well. Certainly some of the philosophers were pantheistic. But what really underlies both the religious and mysticism aspects of the Nazis is the symbolism buried underneath. In fact, one follower of fascism believed that the masses were unable to understand anything other than mere slogans. From Mein Kampf the following quote concerns the symbolism hidden behind the Nazi flag.
" Not only that the unique colors, which all of us so passionately love and which once won so much honor for the German people, attest our veneration for the past; they were also the best embodiment of the movement's will. As National Socialists, we see our program in our flag. In red we see the social idea of the movement, in white the nationalistic idea, in the swastika the mission of the struggle for victory of the Aryan man, and by the same token, the victory of the idea of creative work, which as such always has been and always will be anti-Semitic."66
At first in the quote above, Hitler is referring to the old flag of Germany. The choice of red was based on stealing from the communists and was chosen deliberately to enflame the Marxists. Throughout Mein Kampf, Hitler refers to the value of propaganda and made extensive use of symbols to convene a subtle message of hatred.
The similarities to the right wing in America is seen. The Republicans have introduced a flag desecration amendment to protect their symbolism. Even more revealing was the letter Newt Gingrich distributed to members of GOPAC. In this letter, members were to use the following words to impart a negative image: decay, failure, sick, liberal, unionized, welfare, corrupt, greed and intolerant. The following words were to impart a positive imagine: share, legacy, control, truth, and courage.68
Cults are inherently fascist in nature. The leader demands total submersion into the cult. America today has seen far too many examples of cults and cult behavior. A recent example, would be the Waco incident that ended badly. However, there are several right wing groups that do exhibit cult behavior besides the religious groups; the LaRouchians, many of the militias, and the Order would all qualify as cults. In addition, much of the hard right inside the Republican Party has taken on a cult like behavior in their idolizing Reagan. The 105th Congress renamed the Washington airport after him. In the present Congress Congressman Matt Salmmon of Arizona has introduced a bill to deface Mt Rushmore by adding Reagan's imagine to the monument.69

It has been shown beyond any reasonable doubt that Hitler and the Nazis were right wing extremists best described as social darwinists, the antithesis of socialism. It was showed that the Nazis were best described by syndicalism model and that syndicalism is neither socialistic nor capitalistic, inherently. Syndicalism can be either depending upon the makeup; the Nazis were definitely capitalists in that there was no input from labor. All input was reserved for the industrialist. Further, it was shown that the industrialists openly defied Nazi desires in the case of the use of low-grade ores. It was also shown that many of the businesses that was government owned were taken over by the government prior to the Nazis, some dating all the way from the monarchy. Likewise, it was shown that many of the Nazi programs would be classified as corporate welfare today. And it was shown that the real power behind the Nazi movement was the top elitist. This should be sufficient for anyone to dispel the myth that the Nazis were socialist, when in fact they were capitalistic extremists.
In defining fascism, three traits stand above all others, totalitarian, nationalism, and extreme corporatism. In fact, one can not have fascism without corporatism. Other traits of fascism, such as destructive divisionism and the use of violence are secondary. As fascist ideology evolved in the later half of the 20th Century, a happy face was put on fascism by its leaders as they down played the violence and racism. This can be seen best in the far right wing extremist groups currently active in the United States.
Additionally, there is one fact that absolutely places the Nazis and fascism in the extreme right wing portion of the political spectrum, and not the left. No one disputes that a communist revolution attacks the ruling elite of a country. Similarly, socialism and liberalism also attacks the same ruling elite, but the right wing extremists try to claim the opposite. In reality these systems merely seek methods to ease the burden and allow the lower classes to prosper rather than attacking the elite. The Nazis, on the other hand, did not attack the ruling elite of Germany. The rich industrialists were allowed to continue their ways, eased by laws that the Nazis enacted for their benefit. Likewise, the nobility of Germany was supported by the Nazis. In short, the Nazis adopted the ruling elite in Germany and supported them, the exact opposite of what a left leaning political ideology would support.
There is no better proof of the Nazi support for the ruling elite than looking at who supported Hitler in the 1930s in America. Granted, many lower class people were involved in the pro-Hitler movement just as in Germany. But like Germany, it was the rich industrialists that funded these groups. Hearst ordered his newspapers to print pro-Nazi articles. In fact, he had them print the Nazi propaganda directly from Gobbels. Irenee du Pont funded several pro-fascist groups. Henry Ford was well known for his praise of Hitler and funded many pro-Nazis in the 30s. Andrew Mellon and John D. Rockefeller were supporters of Hitler as well. No one is foolish enough to argue that these men were not part of the ruling elite or rich industrialists in America at the time. In fact, support for Hitler among the rich industrialists was rampant.

The continued propagation of such nonsense by the present right wing is nothing short of propaganda. It fits closely with the Nazis' use of propaganda and the symbolism proposed by Gingrich and his negative words. nor will it change the history of the right wing support of the Nazis.

The intelligent crooks, perverts, child molesters, intern molesters, treasonous terrorists, economic terrorists, etc. are illegally holding our public servant offices and displaying their get-out-of-jail-free-cards.

Well, true to form, you continue down an idiots path ... the public servants are the treasonous crooks, the rich elite, corporations, NWO types, etc. are their puppet masters ... neither are serving me. Anyone, other than rich elite, corporations, NWO types, etc., who thinks they are are serving them are imbeciles along with you.

The right-wing Daily Caller website has been anything but kind to Occupy Wall Street, even going so far as to condemn the protest movement as generating riots, murder, and arson.

But when a couple of Daily Caller employees were at Occupy Wall Street this morning, it was the very protesters they had been demonizing who ended up helping them out. Daily Caller reporter Michelle Fields — who faced off with actor Matt Damon earlier this year over education policy — and videographer Direna Cousins both claim they were attacked by the New York Police Department (NYPD) while covering the raucous protests in the Financial District today. Fields added that Occupy Wall Street protesters immediately came up to her to offer their help:

“Direna had a camera in her hand and I had a microphone, and we were being hit,” she said. “When I fell to the ground I said at one point, ‘I’m just covering this! I’m covering this!’ And the officer just said, ‘Come on, get up, get up,’ before pulling me up by my jacket.’” “The protesters came up to me right away and asked if I needed any medical assistance. They were actually very kind and helpful. It was the police officers who were very aggressive,” Fields added.

Fields says that protesters right now are effectively “barricaded” in Zuccotti Park, which was the spot from which they were ousted from on Tuesday.

As socialistworker.org admits, http://socialistworker.org/2003-2/471/471_09_Fascism.shtml
the left routinely applies the term "fascist" to any Republican political leader. In Britain The Guardian, BBC, and other liberal media pounced on purported links between the Bush family and corporations that had dealings with Nazi Germany. The fact that Prescott Bush, George W. Bush's grandfather, was a "director and shareholder" with companies that had indirect financial dealings with Germany in the 1930s would hardly seem damning, however. Much the same could be said for many other affluent individuals in America or Britain at the time. Every American today with mutual fund holdings is invested, at least indirectly, in Hugo Chavez's Venezuela. Does that make them Marxist revolutionaries?

Talk of Hitler became a lot more common during the Bush years, when it was accepted wisdom on the left that George Bush was worse than Hitler. Then there was Nancy Pelosi, who spent weeks back in 2010 complaining of the Tea Party's so-called "swastika signs" -- signs that did not signal an alliance with fascism but opposition to it.
Pelosi was hardly alone in accusing the Tea Party of fascism. Marc Rubin, writing for examiner.com, referred to Tea Party members as "text book fascists." He went on to pin the neo-fascist label on Tom Tancredo, presumably because of Tancredo's concerns over illegal immigration. If those concerns make Tancredo a fascist, they would make the majority of Americans who share those concerns fascists as well. But that's pretty much how the left sees America.

The immediate response of liberals such as Chris Matthews http://www.mrc.org/biasalert/2011/20110412110017.aspx to the Ryan "Path to Prosperity" was to characterize it as a killer not just of babies and old people but of "half the people who watch this show." This attempt to portray the GOP plan as genocidal is just another example of the fascist rhetoric. It appears that Matthews is attempting to portray the Ryan plan as some sort of Final Solution.

It's not just loose cannons on MSNBC who resort to fascist innuendo. Obama's speechwriters are good at crafting sinister suggestions even without using the "F" word. Obama's budget speech of April 13 actually set the tone for the current debate. With Rep. Ryan sitting on the front row, Obama lectured his audience that the GOP plan would kick "someone's grandparents" out of nursing homes and cause children with autism and Down's syndrome to "fend for themselves." It is well known that Hitler sent legions of the disabled to concentration camps to be gassed, but the suggestion that a plan to actually save Medicare and Medicaid resembles the Holocaust, if that is what Obama intended, is repellent. It was one more proof, as if we needed any more, of a fatal weakness in the character of this President. He is a man whose entire existence is devoted to gutter politics. For such a man, statesmanship and dignified leadership are inconceivable.

The plan truth is that America can no longer afford this sort of reckless partisanship on the part of the chief executive. The fact that Obama disagrees with Rep. Ryan's budget plan does not justify accusations of killing sick children or tossing old folks out on the street. That kind of rhetoric may pass for wit in the sixth grade, but it is juvenile coming from the President.

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - http://mises.org/midroad.asp

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and

Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - 1952 - http://mises.org/books/planningforfreedom_mises.pdf

The origins of the modern left can be traced back to the famous passage in Rousseau's Discourse on the Origin and Foundations of Inequality, in which he condemned the institution of private property:

"The first man, who after enclosing a piece of ground, took it into his head to say, 'this is mine,' and found people simple enough to believe him, was the real founder of civil society."

Added Rousseau: "How many crimes, how many wars, how many murders, how many misfortunes and horrors, would that man have saved the human species, who pulling up the stakes or filling up the ditches should have cried to his fellows: Beware of listening to this impostor; you are lost, if you forget that the fruits of the earth belong equally to us all, and the earth itself to nobody!"

Around the 1830s, a faction of French liberals gravitated toward Romanticism and the philosophy of the late Rousseau, proclaiming that capitalism, private property, and the increasing complexity of modern society were agents of moral decay -- both for the individual and for society at large. This is essentially the worldview that has made its way, through history, into the collective mind of the modern left; it is a worldview calling for a revolution that not only will topple the existing capitalist order and punish its corrupt leaders, but that also will replace that order with a socialist regime where the utopian ideals of perfect justice and equality will reign. Such an ambition can be put into effect only by a totalitarian state with the authority to micromanage every facet of human life, precisely the end-point toward which the policies and crusades of the modern left are directed.

When the term "liberalism" (from the Latin word liberalis, meaning "pertaining to a free man") first emerged in the early 1800s, its hallmarks were a belief in individual rights, the rule of law, limited government, private property, and laissez faire economics. These would remain the defining characteristics of liberalism throughout the liberal epoch (generally identified as the period of 1815-1914). Yet the modern left, which portrays itself as the agent of enlightened commitment to "liberal" causes, in fact stands for the antithesis of each of the foregoing liberal ideals. Contrary to its self-definition,

reactionary force that seeks to resurrect the traditions that characterized the epoch which preceded the rise of classical liberalism.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete correctness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

==========
World Book encyclopedia gives some presidents more love than others

By Aleksandra Kulczuga

The venerable publishing company World Book, which produces a variety of popular reference materials, has released an online children's encyclopedia that is drawing fire from experts who charge that it lets politics get in the way of objective facts.

The information contained in the World Book Kids edition on U.S. presidents appears to negatively portray Republican executives while glossing over controversies surrounding Democratic ones, a review by The Daily Caller has found.

The encyclopedia's entry on former President Bill Clinton, for example, includes effusive commentary on his college days. Clinton "read a lot, joined clubs and played the saxophone in band," the entry states. The comments on Clinton's upbringing also include anecdotes about his childhood growing up in a troubled home, which the entry says taught him to be a "peacemaker" and helped him develop "skills that would help him be a good leader."

The encyclopedia calls Clinton "a hard-working student" who paid attention to "fights for justice for African Americans." But World Book makes no mention of George W. Bush's push for aid to Africa, or Ronald Reagan's fight to end the oppression of people living under Communism.

There is also no mention of President Clinton's impeachment, though the entry does state that "some people questioned his family's money deals and his morals."

By contrast, Richard Nixon's entry mentions his resignation in the very first line. And Ronald Reagan's entry concludes that "many people" felt that the Iran-Contra scandal was wrong. It also focuses extensively on what World Book perceives as his policy failures while in office:

Reagan met with Mikhail Gorbachev, the leader of the Soviet Union. They signed an agreement to get rid of some kinds of nuclear weapons. But a government group secretly sold weapons to Iran and gave the money to political groups in Nicaragua. Many people felt it was wrong.

During his first term, Reagan wanted lower taxes and more money for defense. Congress adopted most of his programs. But in 1981, companies failed and people lost their jobs. The government spent far more than it took in. In March 1981, a man tried to kill Ragan [sic].

The World Book's entry on President Obama is the longest of all the recent presidents' and goes into the details of his move to Chicago to "work for a church group that helped people in poor, inner-city neighborhoods."

But the encyclopedia's commentary on George W. Bush contains only one paragraph related to his presidency, and George H.W. Bush's entry sums up his term in office on a sobering note:

The United States also had trouble at home. Many people did not have jobs. A growing number of people were homeless. Americans worried about crime and drug abuse. Many people blamed Bush for not solving these problems. Bush wanted to win another term as president, but he lost the election in 1992.

These entries, which are geared towards children from the 1st through 5th grades, are raising concerns among experts who think they are too opinionated to be featured in the World Book, which calls itself the "number #1 selling print encyclopedia in the world."

Jimmy Wales, the founder of the popular user-generated online encyclopedia Wikipedia, said that the World Book Kids edition injects too much subjectivity into its entries.

"Wikipedia, while by no means perfect, does have a strong policy that the encyclopedia itself should never take a stand on any controversial issue – but should present all the major viewpoints accurately," Wales told The Daily Caller. "The proper goal of an encyclopedia is to give people the information they need to think about an issue for themselves – not to guide them to a conclusion. These entries you have shown me left me looking for the 'edit' link to tone down the bias."

Others more sharply condemned the World Book's contents.

"I find these entries outrageously unobjective in their accounts of the achievements and failures of the presidents," said Marsha Familaro Enright, an educator for over 25 years who founded a Montessori school in Chicago in 1990 and recently started a foundation, The Reason, Individualism, Freedom Institute, to build a new liberal arts college.

"Furthermore, these entries present a very limited amount of information to children, in a very poorly reasoned fashion – shocking for an encyclopedia which, one would presume, is meant to convey well-researched, well-presented, and well-reasoned material to children as a trusted source and an example of how to think and write," said Enright.

Enright added that biased reference materials regularly pose a challenge for her staff and students.

"This is the kind of material or worse that we face daily in choosing texts for grade school children – material which makes a pretense at quality and objectivity, yet teaches poor reasoning and biased information to its audience," Enright said. "It's no wonder students arrive at college freshman year with poor cognitive skills, ripe for the collectivist chanting that indoctrinates them more."

Calls and emails to Chicago-based World Book, Inc., which is owned by Berkshire Hathaway, went unanswered.

The use of this quote merely proves that no one -- not the leftists, not the rightists -- has the slightest idea of what he or she is talking about.

Both want to characterize the "other side" as "fascist" because that is a word that has become demonized -- and, as George Orwell said, has in common parlance lost all its original meaning and now is simply a synonym for what one doesn't like.

Mussolini, who invented modern fascism, though it was based on a Roman concept, was _not_ referring to corporations as we know them in that quote.

He was referring to organized interest groups: farm workers, industrial workers, small business owners, large business owners, farmers, state workers, et cetera, each of which was organized as a body ("corpore") and represented in the legislature. He was not referring to limited liability corporations as we know them today. The quote is very deceptive if not understood in the language of its time.

That's not to say that the marriage of the omnipotent state with the globalist money-men and their modern corporations is a good thing. It isn't. We just need a better word for it.

Mussolini, for all his flaws, would have been against the usurers (bankers) and their globalist corporations, by the way. They are profoundly anti-nationalist and anti-culture.

Read Ezra Pound's poem _With Usura_. (http://fisheaters.com/usura.html)

An excerpt:

"Usura slayeth the child in the womb
"It stayeth the young man's courting
"It hath brought palsey to bed, lyeth
"between the young bride and her bridegroom

" CONTRA NATURAM

"They have brought whores for Eleusis
"Corpses are set to banquet

"at behest of usura."

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. Unionize ALL workers immediately.

Raise the minimum wage immediately to $18/hr. Create a maximum wage of $90/hr to eliminate inequality.

Institute a 6 hour workday, and 6 weeks of paid vacation.

Institute a moratorium on all foreclosures and layoffs immediately.

Repeal racist and xenophobic English-only laws.

Open the borders to all immigrants, legal or illegal. Offer immediate, unconditional amnesty, to all undocumented residents of the US.

Create a single-payer, universal health care system.

Pass stricter campaign finance reform laws. Ban all private donations. All campaigns will receive equal funding, provided by the taxpayers.

Institute a negative income tax, and tax the very rich at rates up to 90%.

Pass far stricter environmental protection and animal rights laws.

Allow workers to elect their supervisors.

Lower the retirement age to 55. Increase Social Security benefits.

Create a 5% annual wealth tax for the very rich.

Ban the private ownership of land.

Make homeschooling illegal. Religious fanatics use it to feed their children propaganda.

Reduce the age of majority to 16.

Abolish the death penalty and life in prison. We call for the immediate release of all death row inmates from death row and transferred to regular prisons.

Release all political prisoners immediately.

Immediate withdrawal from Iraq and Afghanistan.

Abolish the debt limit.

Ban private gun ownership.

Strengthen the separation of church and state.

Immediate debt forgiveness for all.

End the 'War on Drugs'.

It is to the interest of the AmeriKan proletariat, the petty bourgeoisie and the small peasants to support these demands with all possible energy. Only by the realisation of these demands will the millions in AmeriKa, who have hitherto been exploited by a handful of persons and whom the exploiters would like to keep in further subjection, win the rights and attain to that power to which they are entitled as the producers of all wealth.

Fascism is a form of extreme right-wing ideology that celebrates the nation or the race as an organic community transcending all other loyalties. It emphasizes a myth of national or racial rebirth after a period of decline or destruction. To this end, fascism calls for a "spiritual revolution" against signs of moral decay such as individualism and materialism, and seeks to purge "alien" forces and groups that threaten the organic community. Fascism tends to celebrate masculinity, youth, mystical unity, and the regenerative power of violence. Often, but not always, it promotes racial superiority doctrines, ethnic persecution, imperialist expansion, and genocide. At the same time, fascists may embrace a form of internationalism based on either racial or ideological solidarity across national boundaries. Usually fascism espouses open male supremacy, though sometimes it may also promote female solidarity and new opportunities for women of the privileged nation or race.

Fascism's approach to politics is both populist--in that it seeks to activate "the people" as a whole against perceived oppressors or enemies--and elitist--in that it treats the people's will as embodied in a select group, or often one supreme leader, from whom authority proceeds downward. Fascism seeks to organize a cadre-led mass movement in a drive to seize state power. It seeks to forcibly subordinate all spheres of society to its ideological vision of organic community, usually through a totalitarian state. Both as a movement and a regime, fascism uses mass organizations as a system of integration and control, and uses organized violence to suppress opposition, although the scale of violence varies widely.

Fascism is hostile to Marxism, liberalism, and conservatism, yet it borrows concepts and practices from all three. Fascism rejects the principles of class struggle and workers' internationalism as threats to national or racial unity, yet it often exploits real grievances against capitalists and landowners through ethnic scapegoating or radical-sounding conspiracy theories. Fascism rejects the liberal doctrines of individual autonomy and rights, political pluralism, and representative government, yet it advocates broad popular participation in politics and may use parliamentary channels in its drive to power. Its vision of a "new order" clashes with the conservative attachment to tradition-based institutions and hierarchies, yet fascism often romanticizes the past as inspiration for national rebirth.

Fascism has a complex relationship with established elites and the non-fascist right. It is never a mere puppet of the ruling class, but an autonomous movement with its own social base. In practice, fascism defends capitalism against instability and the left, but also pursues an agenda that sometimes clashes with capitalist interests in significant ways. There has been much cooperation, competition, and interaction between fascism and other sections of the right, producing various hybrid movements and regimes.

Chapter 1: Financing the 1933 Elections
On the cold winter weekend of January 28, 1933, Germany was officially without a government. Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher and his cabinet had resigned on Saturday afternoon, and eighty-six-year-old President von Hindenburg had not yet appointed a new chancellor. A nervous tension spread over Berlin. Everyone waited for news; most felt Germany was at an historic turning point.
Who would be the next chancellor? Hitler - the leader of the largest party, the Nazis, who pledged to destroy democracy? Papen - the aristocratic horseman who had been chancellor before Schleicher, but who had no popular following? Perhaps Schleicher again, if he could persuade the Social Democrats, the second largest political party in the country, to join him in a coalition? Governing Germany in the middle of an economic depression with nine million unemployed was not an enviable task. The country had just had three different chancellors in rapid succession. By tradition, the leader of the largest party was usually appointed chancellor. But the Nazis had been the largest party for over a year, and so far intrigues and political maneuvering had succeeded in keeping Hitler out of power. Everyone guessed what a Hitler government would mean. He had not kept his militarism, anti-Semitism, and dictatorial ambitions a secret.

Political intrigues were so numerous that weekend that no one really knew what was going on. Sensational rumors were being spread throughout the city. Some said an army coup was imminent, that Schleicher and the generals were about to abduct President von Hindenburg and declare martial law. There were also rumors of an armed Nazi uprising and a general strike by the socialist workers.
Hitler and Hermann Goering, the second most powerful man in the Nazi party, stayed up all night on Sunday, January 29, trying to figure out what Hindenburg might do. It was not until after 10 A.M. on Monday that Hitler received a summons to the president's office. Even at that point, the Nazis were not certain whether Hitler would be appointed chancellor or Hindenburg would ask him to serve as vice-chancellor.
Across the street from the Chancellery, in the Kaiserhof Hotel, Hitler's lieutenants were waiting, unsure of what was going on. Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda chief, said:

In the street the crowd stands waiting between the Kaiserhof and the Chancellery. We are torn between doubt, hope, joy and despair. We have been deceived too often to be able, wholeheartedly, to believe in the great miracle. [S.A.] Chief of Staff Roehm stands at the window (with binoculars) watching the door of the Chancellery from which the Fuehrer [the leader, Hitler] must emerge. We shall be able to judge by his face if the interview was a success. Torturing hours of waiting.
At last, a car draws up in front of the entrance. The crowd cheers. They seem to feel that a great change is taking place....
A few moments later, he is with us. He says nothing. His eyes are full of tears. It has come! The Fuehrer is appointed Chancellor. He has already been sworn in by the President of the Reich. All of us are dumb with emotion. Everyone clasps the Fuehrer's hand....Outside the Kaiserhof, the masses are in a wild uproar....The thousands soon become tens of thousands. Endless streams of people flood the Wilhelmstrasse. We set to work...at once.
Hitler's victory was not a complete one by any means. He had been appointed chancellor in a coalition government. Papen was to be his vice-chancellor, and all the powerful cabinet posts were held by Papen's conservative allies, rather than the Nazis. But at the moment, Hitler's followers weren't worried about the details; for them the only thing that mattered was that Hitler was chancellor. They had come to power! All day, crowds gathered in the square outside the Kaiserhof Hotel and the Chancellery.

At dusk Nazi storm troopers in their brown uniforms gathered in the Tiergarten park, along with men of the Stahlhelm, an ultranationalistic veterans' organization, for a torchlight victory parade through the center of Berlin. As soon as it was dark, they came marching by the thousands through the Brandenburg Gate, carrying swastika flags and the black, white, and red flags of the German empire. Bands marched between the units, beating their big drums as the men sang old German military songs. But as each band came to the Pariser Platz, where the French embassy was located, they stopped whatever they were playing and, with an introductory roll of drums, broke into the tune of the challenging war song "Victorious We Will Crush the French."
The torches carried by the marchers glowed hypnotically in the darkness. To foreign witnesses, it was a frightening sight. "The river of fire flowed past the French Embassy," Ambassador François-Poncet wrote, "whence, with heavy heart and filled with foreboding, I watched this luminous wake." Liberal Germans found it an "ominous sight." It was, wrote one German reporter, "a night of deadly menace, a nightmare in...blazing torches."
As the marchers came by the Chancellery, there were tumultuous cheers for Hitler, who stood in an open window saluting them. He was so excited that night, he could hardly stand still. He was raising his arm up and down heiling, smiling, and laughing so much, his eyes filled with tears. "It was an extraordinary experience," recalled Papen, who was standing behind Hitler. "The endless repetition of the triumphal cry: 'Heil, Heil, Sieg Heil!' rang in my ears like a tocsin." When Hitler turned to speak with Papen, his voice choked with emotion. "What an immense task we have set for ourselves, Herr von Papen - we must never part until our work is accomplished." Hitler and Papen were much closer allies than anyone at the time imagined.
It was after midnight when the parade ended. Being too excited to sleep, Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, and a few other Nazis sat up talking for hours. They could hardly believe it had actually happened: they were in the Chancellery at last. That evening, Hitler said to Goebbels, "No one gets me out of here alive." It was one of the few promises he kept.
On the morning of January 31, Hitler's storm troopers gave the German people a glimpse of what Nazi rule would be like. All over Germany, thugs in brown shirts took possession of the streets and roughed up Communists, socialists, and Jews; they chased socialist mayors and officials out of government buildings and even broke into the private homes of their political enemies. When people complained to Papen, he laughed. "Let the storm troopers have their fling." Among his friends at the Herrenklub, an exclusive gentlemens club, he boasted: "We've hired Hitler." To a skeptic he replied: "What do you want? I have Hindenburg's confidence. Within two months we will have pushed Hitler so far in the corner that he'll squeak."

The facts seemed to support Papen's optimism. Not only did Papen have Hindenburg"s confidence, but in fact the old president had promised never to receive Hitler unless he was accompanied by his vice-chancellor. Papen also held the important post of minister-president of Prussia, Germany's largest and most powerful state. From the composition of the cabinet, it seemed all the real power was in the hands of the conservatives: the aristocratic General von Blomberg was minister of defense, Baron von Neurath, a career diplomat, was foreign minister, and the old archreactionary Hugenberg was both minister of economics and minister of agriculture. The Nazis were outnumbered six to two.
The two Nazis in the cabinet, Wilhelm Frick and Goering, held posts that were thought to be insignificant. Frick was minister of the interior, but he did not control the police, which in Germany was under the jurisdiction of the individual state governments. Goering was made minister without portfolio, but with the promise that he would be minister of aviation as soon as Germany had an air force. He was also named minister of the interior of Prussia, an office that did not receive much notice by the public but did control the Prussian police.
The aristocrats and gentlemen of the Right who made up the majority of Hitler's cabinet hated the concept of democracy even more than the Nazis did. These men belonged to the old ruling class of the kaiser's Germany. They wanted to regain their old position of supremacy, lost in 1918. They wanted to restore the monarchy, suppress the socialist unions, avenge the loss of World War I, and make Germany the dominant power in Europe. It was obvious why such reactionary nationalists helped put Hitler in power: their goals and his were very similar.
Few people knew the full extent of Papen's collaboration with Hitler. Historians have said he "did more than anyone else outside the Nazi party to help Hitler to power." Papen helped Hitler because he was trying to control him and use the Nazis for his own aims.
Papen was a handsome aristocratic-looking man with distinguished gray hair and an officer's mustache. From an impoverished family of the Westphalian nobility, he became a General Staff officer, a skillful horseman, and a man of great charm. After a successful marriage to the daughter of a wealthy Saar industrialist, he bought a large block of shares in the Center party's newspaper, Germania. For a short time in 1932, Papen was chancellor, but his government had no popular support.
Papen believed it would be rather easy for an aristocratic officer like himself to manipulate a former corporal, like Hitler, and thus be able to use the Nazi's mass following to accomplish the aims of the upper-class conservative nationalists.
Hitler immediately began to outmaneuver his conservative colleagues. He reported to the cabinet that the Center party was making impossible demands and could not be counted on to form a coalition with the Nazis and the Nationalists that would have a majority in the Reichstag. Because of this situation, Hitler argued he would have to call for new elections. The only "demand" the Center party made was that Hitler promise to govern constitutionally, but none of the other members of the cabinet bothered to check Hitler's statement. They agreed to new elections on the condition that Hitler promise that the composition of the cabinet would not change regardless of the outcome of the voting. New elections would provide Hitler with a chance to improve on the poor results the Nazis had received at the polls the past November. If the Nazis won a clear majority in the elections, they might be able to get rid of their coalition partners. Hitler had every reason to believe the election campaign would be a big success. The entire machinery of government, including the radio, was now under Nazi control and could be used for campaigning. The party had been flooded with new applicants for membership since he had become chancellor. In the cabinet meeting on February 2, Hitler discussed his preparations for the elections. Wilhelm Frick, the Nazi minister of the interior, proposed that the government set aside a million marks for the election campaign. Count von Schwerin von Krosigk, the minister of finance, rejected this suggestion. Hitler did not force the issue. He would have to get the money elsewhere.

The theme of the Nazi election campaign was to be the fight against communism. Hitler opened the attack in a late-night radio broadcast to the nation on February 1. He blamed the hard times Germany had gone through since 1918 on the Social Democrats, which had been the largest party in the Reichstag during most of those years. The Social Democrats, he reminded his listeners, were actually a Marxist party. "Fourteen years of Marxism," he said, "have ruined Germany; one year of bolshevism [communism] would destroy her. The richest and fairest territories of the world would be turned into a smoking heap of ruins. Even the sufferings of the last decade and a half could not be compared to the misery of a Europe in the heart of which the red flag of destruction has been hoisted." He went on to promise to put the unemployed back to work and save the peasants from bankruptcy.

On his fourth day in office, just after opening the election campaign, Hitler took time off to attend a very important dinner. He had been invited to the home of General von Hammerstein, chief of staff of the army, to meet the leading officers of the army and navy. In a speech that lasted almost two hours, Hitler explained his plans for rebuilding German military power.

The generals were the real power in Germany during the Weimar period. After World War II, many Germans tried to cover up the role certain members of the Officer Corps had played in helping to put Hitler in power. Many historians naively accepted this view, but the real story is quite different. Traditionally, the German Army ruled from behind the scenes and had the final "power to veto" any important issue. After the loss of World War I, the Versailles Treaty severely restricted the size of the German Army. The only way the generals could maintain mass training and develop new weapons was to finance private paramilitary units, like the Free Corps, with secret army funds.

Hitler not only began his career as an army agent, but even in the 1930s he was supported by a powerful faction in the army. Over several years, General von Schleicher, who was in charge of a secret informal political department of the army, funneled over ten million marks to Hitler. Why? Many military officers wanted an authoritarian government that could unify the nation. The people needed to be infused with a new spirit of patriotism because powerful interests were planning a war of revenge against the Allies. Naturally there was a division of opinion among the generals as to how much power to give Hitler. Hindenburg originally had strong reservations about appointing a man from a lower-class background, like Hitler, chancellor. However, the aggressive action the Nazis took against Communists was admired by Hindenburg, and his relationship with Hitler rapidly improved.
One day, Hindenburg summoned Hitler when Papen was away from Berlin. Hitler informed the president that Papen was out of town and reminded him of the rule he (Hindenburg) had made, that the chancellor could visit him only when accompanied by the vice-chancellor. "The old gentleman [Hindenburg]," said Hitler, "replied that he wished to see me alone, and that in the future the presence of Papen could be regarded as unnecessary. Within three weeks, he had progressed so far that his attitude towards me became affectionate and paternal. Talking of the elections fixed for the 3rd of March, he said, 'What are we going to do if you fail to get a majority? We shall have the same difficulties all over again.'"
At the beginning of the election campaign, Hitler and Papen persuaded old President von Hindenburg to sign an emergency decree to protect law and order. The decree gave Nazi officials the right to prohibit public meetings. Newspapers could be suppressed if they "incited" civil disobedience or published "false" reports.

Fascism should rightly be called Corporatism, as it is the merger of Wow.

I remember listening to YOU-and Dr. Pierce-on the first regen I ever built when I lived in Texas, about ten miles from the Louisiana line on that shortwave station the NA bought time on. I did not always agree with what you said but I damn sure backed your right to say it. Pierce was really an intelligent person. I read the biography on him by Robert Griffin, great read.

Louisiana is a seriously warped state. Texas was screwed up in some ways but Louisiana with its nightmarish hodgepodge of laws built on four different legal systems and general laissez-les-bon-temps-rouler attitude is Third World.

Regens are a pain in the ass. The best regen ever built was probably the National SW-3, or for low frequency work the old Mackay Marine set. Lindsay is full of shit when he says the homebrewer can better it with moderate effort.And even so any mediocre superhet will outperform it in some ways. My late forties Zenith console will separate stations the SW-3 won't. But they are interesting to build-once-like the crystal set, which can be run into a hi fi amp and give good local station performance. My regen was the two tube set in the Romney book which Lindsay also published. The SW-3 was far better-it would copy ham CW on 80 and 40 consistently and even SSB with a good signal. The homebrew was good for WWV and Radio Havana and that was it.

Sooner or later they do get caught, because they get greedy and or sloppy.

Look at Leopold and Loeb.. Two really intelligent individuals who got the idea to kill someone to see if they could. The local cops had them in jail in no time at all even though the average cop back then was a dumbshit. They narrowly escaped execution because Clarence Darrow defended them.

The R392 used conventional tubes selected for performance at 24 volt B +. 24 volts isn't much but is a lot better than 12. The 12 volt tubes were space chrge affairs and were current hogs and delicate.

They use the taste buds of aborted babies to test the flavor of their drinks. No aborted parts go into the drink. The thing to do is get this outlawed and to stop abortion all together. Wisconsin (my state) couldn't even get a law passed on selling parts from aborted fetuses. I still drink Mt. Dew, but stopping one company is not going to stop the abortion of babies. While you may boycott one company that uses fetal cells for this, there are 100 companies that give to Planned Parenthood to kill the babies in the first place. Are you boycotting them also?

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE EXCITEMENT was at a high level as the number of check-ins to the Liberty Net ï¿½ both via phone patch and over the air ï¿½ seemed to increase right in step with the sunspot numbers.

Hereï¿½s a tiny selection of the issues discussed this week on amateur radioï¿½s most best and longest-running discussion net:

ï¿½ Although poll after poll and vote after vote shows that Ron Paul is the leading Republican candidate, the billionairesï¿½ media are blatantly suppressing that fact ï¿½ more proof that American elections are about as genuine as professional wrestling matches. (30 minutes)

ï¿½ Electing new representatives or a new president is not enough. Not by a long shot. It will take a huge housecleaning and the revocation of thousands of illegal ï¿½lawsï¿½ to reverse over a century of unconstitutional acts and subversion. (40 minutes)

ï¿½ Itï¿½s clear that Israel and its sycophants in the US are slavering to attack Iran. If they do, will it result in a devastating World War in which hundreds of thousands of Americans ï¿½ not just the cannon fodder in the field ï¿½ will die? (59 minutes)

ï¿½ The plague of abandoned and looted houses ï¿½ and dangerous areas where civilized people, and even police, fear to tread ï¿½ is spreading from Detroit to Black-majority and Mestizo-majority areas of Cleveland, Cincinnati, and other rust belt cities. (1 hour 26 minutes)

ï¿½ More and more states and communities are encouraging drivers to use ï¿½EZPassï¿½ ï¿½ which gives faceless bureaucrats detailed information on where you, when you go, how fast you go, when you come back, and whatï¿½s in your bank account. (2 hours 14 minutes)

ï¿½ One of the most promising developments in recent years is the emergence of the Oathkeepers ï¿½ a group of police officers and military men who swear to keep their oaths by refusing to obey illegal, unconstitutional orders. (2 hours 59 minutes)

ï¿½ All members of the military and the police need to understand that the regime in Washington is an illegal regime ï¿½ and that all its wars are illegal wars of aggression ï¿½ and that no election or series of elections is likely to change that. (3 hours 18 minutes)

ï¿½ Wherever fractional reserve banking has been overthrown, the cost of living has fallen by roughly two thirds, and the standard of living has skyrocketed. (3 hours 23 minutes)

ï¿½ New evidence is emerging that police departments are in the business of selling seized drugs on a massive scale. (3 hours 47 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to the Liberty Net right now on your computer here at http://3950.net/ ï¿½ or download the file and listen on your portable mp3 player. And he also operates a live feed and chat during Net times that lets you make an end run around jammers and a fickle ionosphere. Soon, we also hope to see the N2SAG station ï¿½ and Internet feed ï¿½ make a triumphant return once Al relocates!

Join in or listen to the most exciting net on the amateur bands every Saturday night starting at 10PM Eastern Time.

Our thanks go to W1WCR for his hard work and courage in keeping this very important part of the amateur radio service alive since 1974!

Radio West was a small company run by SWL enthusiasts in the 70/80.
Think: Kiwa
I have one of their ICF 2010s with a the stock narrow filter moved to the wide position and their (really excellent) narrow filter installed in the narrow position. They also did a burn-in and alignment. It makes it a real DX machine and I have enjoyed it for close to 25 years.
I don't remember the guys name now but they were highly thought of back

There is a thing now called a green burial, where the body is returned to the earth as compost, and is being used to grow, the so called organic vegetables.

Yes, what you say is true. However, I hope you realize that however bad the national unemployment figures for the Great Recession are, they are two or three times as bad in the minority neighborhoods.

Have you ever heard the following saying? "If a man has money in his wallet, he is much less likely to go after the money in your wallet".

Finally, have you considered that maybe years of abuse, discrimination and third-rate educations for minorities are just finally coming back to haunt us?

Just my humble opinion, but what you say above sounds a little paranoid. I'm not convinced that Joe Bureaucrat really cares that John Citizen was going 59 miles per hour and got off at the Elm Street exit. (Well OK, they may see that the Elm Street exit is very heavily used and might need re-paving sooner than some other exits).

Finally, you should be HAPPY with EZPass -- it is saving YOU, the taxpayer, a lot of money. When compared to hiring people to man the toll booths, the EZPass machinery does not require a salary (other than a bit of electricity), does not require a benefits package and does not require a pension. EZPass is saving YOU and all the other tax payers a lot of money.

You sound like a Google sales rep. Anytime someone has access to where you are and your bank account, a potential for gross abuse exists. Perhaps you may WANT the government to know what rallies you go to, or what political conferences you attend or what religious gatherings you drive to. In my case, I think it's no one's business but mine.

Your philosophy will eventually make any untracked citizen a security threat.

I'm sure the unemployed armies sitting at home (if they still have one..) and living on social assistance will dispute the savings to the taxpayer. It's like the Mississippi State government moving their welfare call centre overseas instead of hiring locally.

You're confusing him with Burr and his four State voting routine. He actually brags about being registered to vote federally in FOUR states.
The last time he used his 'more equal than you' voting franchise was to help get Bush in during his last term.

On the one hand, I somewhat agree with you. We haven't had real "privacy" for a decade or two, witness the many news shows like '60 Minutes' that addressed this issue decades ago.

On the other hand...

If you are THAT worried about privacy, you'd better cut up all your credit cards -- by your purchases, they can tell a lot about you, whether you have a pet or not, what type of food you like, on and on, all from what you put on your credit card. (I will pause here for a moment while you cut up your cards). <grin>

To address your specific issues above, I have to ask if you really understand how EZPass works. It is for toll ways. "They" can only tell what exit you used to leave the toll way. "They" know you got off at the Elm Street exit but they haven't the slightest idea if you went to the porn shop on Elm Street -- or the church on Elm Street.

Also, "they" don't necessarily have direct access to your bank account as you imply above; most people pay their EZPass bill with a check or a credit card. I may be naive, but I think one of the few organizations that has "direct access to your bank account" is PayPal...and only then if you give them permission.

So pardon me if I think your concerns above are a tad overblown at best or a touch paranoid at the worst.

...or like American consumers reaching a call center in India...or Halifax (actually happened to me).

Again, I can see both sides of this issue -- and it is a no-win situation. Some will bitch that their taxes are too high and will welcome the large savings wrought by EZPass. Others can legitimately complain about the loss of jobs.

As a matter of practicality, tax revenue is waaay down due to the Great Recession -- so IMHO, better to replace a toll worker with EZPass than to downsize police and fire. Certainly a no-win situation with no easy answer.

No, in green burial, the remains are just used as fertilizer, in Soylent

Most of what you will hear on a show by David E Kelly will have some truth in it although on some things he tends to stretch it and give it in misleading terms......see "slam fire" on The Practice.

Are you kidding? That would require them to get off their fat asses and actually do something other than talk. I've been listening to their Saturday night bitchfest for decades and one thing is certain; the power establishment has nothing to fear from these do nothings.

At least the "left" walks the walk and will take to the streets and

This is a very interesting assertion. Please provide evidence of Quite true, unfortunately. The problem with the right is that it's always on the DEFENSE, whereas the left is always on the OFFENSE; always on the attack. Unless the right takes to the streets and is willing to risk the physical danger (as the left does) of street action, conservatives will never stop the USA's descent into the abyss.

Hate to say this but you are doomed to fail from the start.
Why? There are PILES of tube type SW receivers available now FAR cheaper than you could build one.

Hey, I get it. It'd be a fun project. I've thought about doing something like this myself but seriously consider the cost.
Not just of the parts but the time involved in the design, marketing, and liability insurance. Bet you didn't think about that one!

Here are some quotes from "The Eleventh Hour" by John Tyndall

"For a short time, Britons from all regions of the country and its Empire, and from every social background, came together in a single cause, casting aside all previous political party and class divisions and joined hands in a common comradeship of the trenches.

And for the first time in centuries politicians in this country put aside party warfare and joined forces in working for a single goal. A coalition government was formed in 1916 and proceeded to coordinate the whole national life in one mighty endeavor. Laissez-faire Economics were dropped as Britain found that these methods, practiced so long in the years of peace had rendered her industry hopelessly incapable of producing her needs of survival in this titanic conflict. New industries, such as chemicals, machine tools and optics, had to be built practically from scratch, while others, such as electricity, aircraft and aero-engines, had to be greatly expanded, in order to provide the sinews of war; and this was done mainly on the initiative of the state. By the end of the war, tremendous strides had been made in making good these previous shortcomings of industry. What the theoretical stimulus of the "free market" had failed to do for decades beforehand was done in just three years of corporate effort, achieved by firm national leadership directing economic resources, and by the whole nation, and Empire, working as a team."

"Could not the super-human efforts displayed on the battlefield in the face of a dangerous adversity now be displayed again in the creation, from out of the rubble of newly born nations?"

"Sir Oswald Mosley... had crossed to the Labour benches after despairing of the Tories' ability or will to overcome the evils of poverty and unemployment in post 1918 Britain...

In time, however, Mosley came to recognize that in the ranks of Labour, however ideal the ends, there was a total incomprehension of, combined an unwillingness to accept, the necessary means... he said:

"This nation has to be mobilized and rallied for a tremendous effort, and who can do that except the government of the day?"

In the simplest terms, nationalism is no more than team spirit. Just as the school, the firm the regiment and the rugby team need, each in its own way to be infused with a pride of identity and a desire to win, so must nations, if they are to be effective forces for the furtherance of their own interests and for their survival in the world, be galvanized by the same vital forces."

Doesn't Goa count as a separate country under the NASWA

I just purchased the Sangean ATS-909X and they did a great job and the radio receives great. The only thing I don't like is the fact that it uses 9V AC for power, so I can't run it from a DC 9V source. The rechargeable battery option is nice, but maybe they should have used an Lithium battery instead of Ni-MH?

The day America died, bye-bye Miss American pie. That this rogue agency of criminal anti-democratic scumbags still exists tells you who REALLY runs the government.

Mark Lane http://marklane.com/index.htm was on Coast to Coast AM last night discussing his latest book which was very interesting. He discussed was how the CIA blatantly operates as an unchecked fourth branch of the U.S. government that ignores the others and routinely violates the U.S. Constitution as a matter of course.

What's the best book you have read on the JFK assassination?
I haven't read them all but I think BROTHERS:The Hidden History of the Kennedy Years by David Talbot merits being in the discussion. Without sensationalizing it exposes the government conspiracy that murdered the President.

By the by Robert and Jackie both believed the CIA was responsible for the murder of JFK. Of course the CIA would later murder RFK to insure that he couldn't expose the truth. How tragic.

You are bestowing undeserved status to the Liberty Net. Occupy Wall Street is a genuine mass movement. The Liberty Net is not a movement, it's a tiny clique of reactionary CONservatives with delusions of grandeur. It is small in number, smaller in stature and embarrassingly ineffective. That they have been in existence for over 30 years and the state of the nation worsens every year is ample evidence of the latter.

The Liberty Net is akin to what the "militia movement" was in the 1980's; 3 men and a jeep running around the woods with rifles dressed in camouflage - metaphorically speaking. Comic relief at its best.

"Alice in Wonderland" was written by a professor who also wrote a book on symbolic logic. So it is not surprising that Alice encountered not only strange behavior in Wonderland, but also strange and illogical reasoning -- of a sort too often found in the real world, and which a logician would be very much aware of.

If Alice could visit the world of liberal rhetoric and assumptions today, she might find similarly illogical and bizarre thinking. But people suffering in the current economy might not find it nearly as entertaining as "Alice in Wonderland."

"Bob: “I don’t know, no one has ever asked”. Too funny. Let’s see what Toyota has to say. According to Bell Road Toyota in Phoenix, they do not supply any vehicles with HD Radio. It’s not even an option to add. I wonder if this makes Toyota lose customers. So I asked Doreen Fischer, sales manager, does not having HD Radio cost you customers? Doreen: “I have never lost a customer due to not having an HD Radio”. Next is Chrysler. Nothing. Same story. In fact, Mary from Chrysler Earnhardt had never even heard of HD Radio before. Interesting. A supposedly hot item that is competition I keep hearing about for satellite radio, and this sales manager of an auto dealer had never even heard of it. Getting a bit disappointed I was sure to find support for HD radio in a known dealer with HD Radio. After all, HD Radio themselves list Scion as a partner. So I called Bell Scion and talked to a very nice gentleman in parts named Dusty Edmund, who also used to work in sales. No Scion comes standard with HD Radio. But the best part were his comments. Dusty: “I have never been trained in selling or distributing HD Radio as a product. And I used to sell cars at many dealers, not just Scion or Toyota.”

OWS is mostly a bunch of naive spoiled punk kids, useful idiots doing the bidding

Can anyone help IDing an Arabic-speaking station on 15349.1 at 1915 UTC? Good-to-VG signal. Prime candidates seem to be RTVM-Morocco (missing from regular 15345) or Oman (assigned 15350). Signal better than usual from either. Programming sounded more like Oman, but signal strength has me thinking RTVM.

I've been to the rallies in Chicago and a couple of other cities.
There's a lot of disruption, and an lot of noise, but little substance. A lot of people there, who, when you ask them why they're there (and I have), will tell you that they want to be part of an important movement, but can't really tell you what the purpose of the movement is. Some who are there because they get to act up/act out with impugnity, and many (I've asked them and they've said the words) who just want 'to be part of a big protest.'
But if you ask what they're protesting, they can't clearly tell you.

There's no doubt that there's a lot of anger, here. And there's no doubt that much of it may be justified. But this 'movement' in particular is more about personal retribution for achievement than it is about punishing those who've done so many people so wrong.

Once they start indiscriminately going through affluent neighborhoods vandalizing any and every thing that smacks of wealth...it's no longer about a cause. It's about the chaos.

I don't know about Winders, but there are plenty of free CAD programs for

You can't blame the guy. There is a major media campaign under way to portray the posters as a bunch of drugged-out troublemakers, which is the farthest thing from the truth. You have to look very carefully to get the very simple message of the 99%ers:

Money has distorted government to the point it no longer functions for anyone except the Top 1% (of the 1% really). People like Mayor Bloomberg use government against the 99%. We will no longer tolerate this.

The right to assemble and demonstrate is as absolute as the right to pray or to publish a harsh missive. Amendment 1.

That flaming liberal Ron Paul supports the Occupiers.

On Thanksgiving Day, Americans gather with their family and friends to celebrate the blessings that Providence has bestowed on their beloved country.

A deep appreciation of these blessings involves understanding that they were earned. It is to understand the awesome truth of how "God helps those who help themselves" applies to the Mayflower Pilgrims and their First Thanksgiving at America's birth.

This is an appreciation and understanding of which those on the Left are incapable - for it would mean celebrating the capitalist freedom that made that original Thanksgiving possible. This no liberal, no Democrat, no leftie can do. Thus they must distort history instead.

The distortion starts in Kindergarten, with the childish make-believe of your kid's school play portraying the noble Squanto teaching the helpless Pilgrims how to feed themselves. So let's drop the curtain on the distortion and watch the real thing. Here it is.

Dr. Wheeler needs to know that God help those who can't help themselves which is what he did on the cross. Man had no hope, but God intervened and took the penalty for all sin. Now, all man has to do is believe and he is forgiven of all sin.

The first Thanksgiving was all about giving thanks to God for his many blessings he had given the Pilgrims as they crossed the sea and afterwards when they had established homes in the Cape Cod area. The first Thanksgiving was a prayfull three day celebration.

What Tracey won't talk about is that the Mayflower Compact prescribed a socialist style of property distribution and socialist government.

Yep, our once great nation started out as a socialist colony. Both the early Virginians and the Plymouth settlers subscribed to socialism.

And it worked.

Actually, it just doesn't matter -- the ones you are speaking of are probably the ones who rallied around clinton, bush and obama -- this will give them something better to do.

The weapons just doesn't matter, tearing the crooks out of their illegally held public servant offices and positions of authority does -- anyway possible.

What a fucking stupid Liberal Fascist JackAss propaganda lie!

The Mayflower Compact was a document signed by 41 male Pilgrims on November 21, 1620. By signing this document, the men agreed to form a temporary government and be bound by its laws. The compact became the basis of government in the Plymouth Colony.

In 1802, President John Quincy Adams, term 1825–1829, (son of President John Adams, term 1797–1801) described the agreement as “the only instance in human history of that positive, original, social compact” and it is popularly believed to have influenced the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution.

The text of the Mayflower Compact:

"In the name of God, Amen. We whose names are underwritten, the loyal subjects of our dread Sovereign Lord King James, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, etc.

"Having undertaken for the Glory of God and advancement of the Christian Faith and Honour of our King and Country, a Voyage to plant the First Colony in the Northern Parts of Virginia, do by these presents solemnly and mutually in the presence of God and one of another, Covenant and Combine ourselves together in a Civil Body Politic, for our better ordering and preservation and furtherance of the ends aforesaid; and by virtue hereof to enact, constitute and frame such just and equal Laws, Ordinances, Acts, Constitutions and Offices from time to time, as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general good of the Colony, unto which we promise all due submission and obedience. In witness whereof we have hereunder subscribed our names at Cape Cod, the 11th of November, in the year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord King James, of England, France and Ireland the eighteenth, and of Scotland the fifty-fourth. Anno Domini 1620."

Yeap! "For the Glory of God and advancement of the Christian Faith", it's a socialist=fascist=communist(athiest) document!

A group of separatists from the Anglican Church left Plymouth, England in September 1620 for the New World, where they felt they would be able to have both civil and religious liberty. They sailed across the Atlantic, in a very rough two-month voyage, until they landed in November. They finally disembarked in December at a place they designated "Plymouth Rock." Before leaving the ship, however, they all signed the "Mayflower Compact." This was America's first document of civil government, and the first ever to institute the concept of self-government.

The colonists immediately held a prayer service and then began the process of building shelter against the cold Massachusetts winter. They were not prepared for the starvation and sickness that accompanied a harsh New England winter, though, and by spring of 1621, nearly half of those who had arrived in December were dead. Persevering, and with the help of the native Indians, they reaped a bountiful harvest that summer. In December of 1621, the grateful colonists decided to thank God and celebrated a three-day feast with their Indian friends.

Reports of this celebration show that colonist Edward Winslow expressed the gratitude of the colony during the feast by saying, "[Y]et by the goodness of God, we are so farre from want[.]"

That is the story we all remember, and the three-day feast really did occur in 1621. But that was not the origin of the Thanksgiving Day we celebrate today.

In large part, the first Thanksgiving Day, which was celebrated in 1623, was a celebration of the abundance arising from the pursuit of individualism and incentives associated with free markets, amazing as that may seem.

The background for understanding Thanksgiving Day is found in records kept by the governor of the Plymouth colony, William Bradford. He informs us that the colonists' English sponsors had arranged for all crops and goods to be held "in the common stock," from which they would be supplied to each family according to its needs (sound familiar?).

As with many other recorded instances of collectivism in the history of mankind, there were disastrous results. Governor Bradford wrote that this experiment reflected a belief of his that common ownership of property would allow the colony to flourish. Instead, it was soon found that communal sharing resulted in unintended consequences. The colonists, as many others have discovered over time, found that individuals work harder within an incentive system that allows them to maintain and enjoy the fruits of their own labor.

Desperate not to repeat the mistakes made by the failed communal settlement in Jamestown, Virginia, where half of the original settlers were lost to starvation or disease, the colonists met to find ways to escape a similar fate. They decided to abandon their communal arrangement for the distribution of goods. Instead, according to Gov. Bradford, from that point forward, "they should set corn every man for his own particular [need]."

Each family would be given a parcel of land to cultivate, and they could keep what they grew from that plot of land (even if they could not deed the land to their heirs, since the ownership of the land was still held communally).

Records were kept, and the records showed that the American colonists in Plymouth Plantation exhibited a dramatic increase in productivity after this change of economic system, where everyone could produce his own food on his own plot of land.

Unfortunately, this success was offset the following summer (of 1623) by a drought. The colonists prayed and offered contrition to God, and, to their amazement, shortly thereafter, the drought ended, and the harvest was saved.

And so it was that the colonists set about to celebrate a "day of thanksgiving to God" that Americans continue to celebrate to this day. Their new economic system that relied on individual efforts and the incentive of keeping the fruits of their own labor ensured that they would be able to produce enough food for the future and brought them great happiness. This system continues to thrive within the freedoms enshrined in America's national heritage.

Nearly 170 years later, in 1789, following a proclamation issued by President George Washington, America celebrated its first official "Day of Thanksgiving to God" under its new Constitution. That same year, the Protestant Episcopal Church, of which President Washington was a member, announced that the first Thursday in November would become its regular day for giving thanks, "unless another day be appointed by the civil authorities."

It wasn't until some seventy-four years later, in 1863, that President Abraham Lincoln issued a proclamation setting aside the last Thursday of November as a national Day of Thanksgiving. Over the next seventy-eight years, presidents followed Lincoln's precedent, annually declaring a national Thanksgiving Day. Then, in 1941, Congress permanently established the fourth Thursday of each November as a national holiday.

So there you have the history of the celebration. Now, a few words on what Thanksgiving means in 2011.

The lessons of the benefits of individual enterprise, and the increased productivity resulting from the freedom to keep what you produce, had dramatic affect on the productivity at Plymouth Plantation. It also had great effect on the growth of the United States of America for over two hundred years.

However, for the past hundred years or so of our American history, there has been a minority of Americans who have felt that the American tradition of individual enterprise fails to adequately provide an equal result for everyone. They, in opposition to American tradition, feel that wealth inequality is not healthy, and they wish to move the country to some sort of communal arrangement, as they had in the Plymouth Colony and in Jamestown, where wealth effectively belongs to the government and is distributed to those in need by the benevolence and wisdom of said body.

That is not the American way. We believe in the sovereignty of the individual and private property rights, not the sovereignty of the collective.

On this Thanksgiving Day in 2011, let us give thanks to God for the bounties He has provided us in America. Those include the "blessings of freedom" mentioned in the preamble to the greatest governing document ever written, our Constitution.

We should thank Him for enabling us to continue to be able to preserve our liberty in this unique and exceptional country of ours, and to prevent from achieving their stated goals those who would destroy this Land of the Free and Home of the Brave by replacing our free-enterprise, private-property system with a collective redistribution of resources to equalize wealth. And, last, but not least, we should thank the American Armed Forces, including those who made the ultimate sacrifice for their country, for their defense of this great Republic, and its freedoms, for the past 235 years.

Our Declaration of Independence states that it is a self-evident truth that all men are created equal. That is, every man is born with the same opportunity to make of his life what he chooses. Not every man will seize that opportunity, which is why there is an inequality of results. But, allowing each to plow his own plot of land and keep the fruits of his labor is what the colonists discovered was the secret to productivity, wealth, and happiness. We must work hard to preserve that exceptional American tradition.

We have much to be grateful for on this Thanksgiving Day in 2011. God Bless America!

Actually, NO, it did NOT work. Read a post later in this thread.
Some of the Pilgrims took advantage of the distribution and did not do their share of the work.

Bullshit, it worked. William Bradford, in his own words:

"The experience that was had in this common course and condition, tried sundry years and that amongst godly and sober men, may well evince the vanity of that conceit of Plato's and other ancients applauded by some of later times; that the taking away of property and bringing in community into a commonwealth would make them happy and flourishing; as if they were wiser than God. For this community (so far as it was) was found to breed much confusion and discontent and retard much employment that would have been to their benefit and comfort. For the young men, that were most able and fit for labour and service, did repine that they should spend their time and strength to work for other men's wives and children without any recompense."

Yet We have settled for keeping the Federal government out of religion.....

The word separate is NOT used in the constitution to describe the relationship between government and religion.

But "congress shall make no law" is very clear.

Establishment is one sided and directed towards government while separate has the connotation that it also directed at the religions themselves.

There is Nothing that stops religions from having an opinion or supporting government.

But it is clear that GOVERNMENT can't establish a NATIONAL religion.

Oh, I think "we" have ... take marriage for example, given to Adam and Eve by God ... the government simply has no right to redefine it ... and "we" damn well know it ... that is, if by "we" you mean rational thinking humans ... but then, "government" has taken on a wholly criminal and treasonous nature. It has broken bounds with sanity and the Constitution and now is slave to rich-elite, mega-corportations and any criminals who can meet the price of its' bribes.

Of course, the government of the people, by the people and for the people is empowered by the Constitution itself ... there is but one true government, and it has been usurped at the present time and is waiting for the people to correct the criminal powers which are at work.

This is no big deal, we were warned of this by the forefathers and given instructions of what to do when this situation occurs ...

"The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants. ... God forbid we should ever be twenty years without such a rebellion; what country can preserve its liberties if their rulers are not warned from time to time that their people preserve the spirit of resistance? Let them take arms." -- Thomas Jefferson to William Stephens Smith, 1787

I think this illegal government has been warned ... and the rest will, quite naturally, occur, as recommended by Jefferson, and rather eloquently, at that!

JS

The drug laws were widely sold to the people as, "People are being duped into becoming addicted."

I have always wondered what kind of logic is at work to make common plants, given to man by his creator, illegal! Indeed, "government" has made these plants illegal to the point where just the mere growing, possession or use will get one SERIOUS time in prisons -- at HIGH costs to taxpayers. It is insane.

We have had drug education for decades. It would be hard to find anyone who is not aware of the dangers of drugs. I say, if they do no other crime than to grow and consume these, I don't give a chit!

I'd much rather see the "control freaks" go into psychotherapy and have their addictions to imprisoning people for growing and consuming these plants cured!

Or, simply, if you are that concerned what your neighbor is doing, perhaps you should stop ...

I don't think I've ever felt the need to share a circuit diagram. Making Too late. It already has.

Fueled by empty-headed grandkids, obsessed hams' reluctant spouses and nitwits, the license has become nothing more than a meaningless memory exercise and the simpletons have rushed to take advantage of getting into ham radio now that they've made it easy enough.

Thank you. FCC , ARRL.

George HW Bush Pukes in Japan, he had vomited and then slid to the floor, thrown up at his seat just before collapsing, rolled his head to the left,
and was clearly fainting before being helped to the floor, actual moment of puke was only shown once on US television

Yes they do ignore the constitution that tells government to stay out of the "business" of religion. My point was that "we" The People decided in the constitution that "congress shall NOT establish a National religion" but there is NOTHING written in the constitution saying that religions can't be present in government.

The constitution powers/laws limit government, they're NOT there to limit religion.

NO, that power is NOT ever given to the Federal government, it's NOT written in the constitution/Amendments.

If you see that wording please show it to me. For someone that likes to quote Marx and the Federalist papers, you know damn little of what is actually written in the constitution.

It simply says " CONGRESS shall make no law" establishing a National religion. Nor can CONGRESS write any law banning people from practicing their Religion.

Amendment I
["Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof"]

How did CONGRESS pass that law that bans religion in a school?
Congress is clearly told NOT to pass laws that limit/ban religious expression. I see Nothing that limits the States power or ability to ban prayer in schools, but CONGRESS did it unconstitutionally instead.

If the people in a State choose to allow religious prayer in their schools then they have that constitutional power to allow it or to deny it State Wide.

That 1st amendment is aimed at Federal Government CONGRESS and we know Schools are run by the States. If they were Federally created and run schools then you might have a point except that too is unconstitutional. Congress has no power to set up schools or to write appropriation laws for money for schools. Obviously the CONGRESS is overstepping their authority and passing FEDERAL LAWS telling schools what they can NOT do and that is clearly "PROHIBITING religion". Which is exact what the constitution told congress that they may NOT do.

Actually, I am too busy with my own life to be bothered with much concern what others are doing, as long as it is no harm to others around them.

It pisses me off when I have to finally start slapping the childens hands and telling them to leave the other children alone!

Actually, George Washington believed in God, he just had disdain for organized religion, whether instituted by government, devious individuals, or corporations ... much the same as any sane person ... however, he did attend church in respect of God.

The Constitution is a document which gives the government few and tightly controlled powers, indeed, specifically only those power necessary to run a safe and sane society while granting all members maximum freedoms and their creator given rights.

If the government is NOT given a specific power in the Constitution, it simply doesn't have an agreement with the people that they can exercise such power(s.)

The Constitution is a document created around the proven evils, and truth, that government will always seek to take too many powers for itself and mistreat the people it should be serving.

In short, the Constitution is pro-citizens and anti-government ... and is only willing to tolerate the exercise of the absolute minimum of government powers ...

I don't think an amateur license was ever meant to support any single view, political affiliations/beliefs, clubs, events, activities, etc. -- other than the experimentation, use and enjoyment of radio.

All the license should require is that one is familiar with the rules and proper operation of radio transmitting equipment ... end of story.

If you want to make anymore of it, you are just some type of criminal,

Amendment I
["Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof"]

How did CONGRESS pass that law that bans religion in a school?
Congress is clearly told NOT to pass laws that limit/ban religious expression. I see Nothing that limits the States power or ability to ban prayer in schools, but CONGRESS did it unconstitutionally instead.

I don't remember CONgress having anything to do with banning prayer in schools. IIRC, it was a SCOTUS decision in the case of Madelyn Murray O'Hare in 1963.

George HW Bush Pukes in Japan, he had vomited and then slid to the floor, thrown up at his seat just before collapsing, rolled his head to the left,
and was clearly fainting before being helped to the floor, actual moment of

The constitution defines the govenment and endows the various branches of government, state and federal, with certain powers. The definition and powers division were drafted at the contitutional convention and ratified by all the states. The Bill of Rights limits the exercise of governmental power somewhat, but, then, so did the Magna Carta.

Religion appears twice in the constitution. Once in Article VI, "The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States."

And in the first Amendment, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

In fact, religious practice is limited and the intention was to limit religion and its insideous incursion in government. The Founding Fathers were well aware of the evils wrought by a state religion whether in England or in the United States and wanted to make certain that no religion was licensed as "official" (that's what an "establishment" is, an official licensed religion -- look it up), and that the federal government would not be compelled by any state to recognize a state religion establishment. Hence, the wording of the amendment (which went through several drafts before being finalized). Not only would the federal government be prohibited from establishing a religion, it would not respect or acknowledge any establishment of religion by any state or territory.

If you don't think there is a limit to religious practice in the United States, hang a witch, as they were prone to do a century before the constituition was ratified, and see what happens. The Founding Fathers -- at least Madison, Washington, Hamilton and a few others, were not devotees of established religions. They tended to look on all that with a jaundiced eye, even while they may have had their own, private beliefs. Madison wanted all references to religion expunged from government and wanted the government to run as if religion did not exist. Washington wasn't far tfrom that view, nor was Franklin, although Franklin never saw it as an issue so significant it should cause much bother. Slavery was much more inportant in his viewpoint.

Let me ask you something. Just where would you draw the line? If Government can play with the exercise of religion, where should it stop?

In the 19-teens it was common to run triodes with no negative bias, and very low V_anode, like 20-30v. It worked, and cuts HT battery cost, but of course distorts the grid signal.

The need for testgear to align the IF will wipe out 99.9% of any potential market.

As pointed out, its going to be far too expensive. If you took that to heart and tried to make something far cheaper, regeneration, although a definite compromise, is a dead sure way to cut costs a lot, and has angelic AGC performance. I recall a simple 3 valve 1930s regen set giving rock steady audio on a signal even an exceptionally complex modern dx set couldnt stabilise.

I remember listening to that piece shit on WBCQ. I suspected he was a government rat from the beginning but wasn't sure. Then he organized a get together for all his listeners at the Meadowlands in New Jersey -"let's all meet for brandies and cigars like real men used to do"..really promoted it hard for a long time on his show.

That was the crystallizing moment I became certain he was a government flunkie rat. Nothing gives the worthless government gestapo agencies a hard-on like those meet, eat and retreat gatherings. They take down all the license plate numbers and snap hundreds of photos of attendees. Thereby justifying their existence, fat pay checks and pensions and state of the art hardware budgets by manufacturing hysteria and fear.

I wonder if Hal's old friend Sean Hannity visits him? Hannity was the shill the FBI used to establish Turner's bona fides prior to his entry onto the shortwaves.

One of the very reasons I DON"T like regens and direct conversions is "No Alignment".

You need to have some kind of sig gen and preferably a scope. That's a feature, not a bug.

Any hamfest in the US will net a working scope for a twenty dollar bill and probably a usable RF generator for a similar sum. The guitar amp twats will part them out for the tubes and throw them in the dumpster often as not.

In a pinch a grid dipper and a solid state RF probe attached to a DMM will work.

Liability insurance is tattooing "SUE ME" on your butt cheeks.

The general aviation industry nearly put ITSELF out of business by answering every lawsuit with....you guessed it...more liability insurance. The scuba diving industry instituted a certification program and convinced all the attorneys that if a noncertified diver killed himself by the traditional methods (embolisms or drowning) juries would just laugh at them. Sport diving equipment companies do not carry PL coverage except for tank explosions out of the water. No one sues them for diving accidents. If they did they'd get the keys to an empty warehouse. The sport diving companies are all turnips, judgementproof. The COMMERCIAL diving companies are very funny as to whom they will sell. The few eccentric hobby hard hat guys will attest to this.

You can buy scuba equipment for a lot less today than thirty years ago, in adjusted dollars. Airplanes have gone up by a factor of three or four or five.

Buy legal insurance, and incorporate yourself so that you can not be construed to have a personal holding corporation. But never buy PL insurance or if you do have it strictly limited to a circumstance which is incidental.

As to the piles of existing sets, yeah, there are-most are in bad need of restoration. And most of them weren't worth a shit new. The few good ones are carefully husbanded. The surplus Collinses and Hammarlunds are about gone.

Sounded like shit, IOW.

Common tubes usually start working okay at 45 to 90 volts. The R-392 used selected tubes at 24-28 volts, and works okay, but not as well as if they had had more. Collins S/Line used 150 volt B+ for what that is worth.

Even with more than four decades of radio under my belt, I still haven't owned a regen -- though I've played with a few.

My next receiver will be an SDR. Eliminating all but one conversion stage (since the SDR goes straight from RF to I/Q baseband) and doing all the filtering and demodulation with perfect mathematical accuracy in software not only gives you tremendous dynamic range and filtering capability, but it makes the recovered audio almost supernaturally clean-sounding.

Listening to a good SDR into a high-fidelity sound system for the first time is like discovering that pillows had been strapped to your speakers, and gravel had been stuck to your voice coil, for all these years -- and finally removing them.

With best regards,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

There is a lot of confusion among the Occupy protesters. And, just as the neocon Zionists tried to take over the Tea Party with their bags of ill-gotten money, so Soros has tried to do the same with OWS. So the movement has, to some extent, become co-opted and derailed.

But I personally know some participants. They are absolutely genuine. And they know that fractional reserve banking -- and the excessive power of the ethnically distinct group that dominates it -- _is_ the problem.

A good general rule of thumb in these times: Whenever Fox News shrilly, fanatically, and desperately opposes something, there must be something _good_ about that something.

The Occupy protesters, as diverse and partially co-opted as they may be, are generally pointed in the right direction. Maybe that's about as good as it gets in any revolution.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

A most astute observation. Mass media create a false "reality" that replaces what used to be a "village consensus" of "the way things are."

This false reality includes false enemies.

Liberty Net: November 19, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/11/liberty-net-november-19-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE LIBERTY NET just continues to grow and grow, and the session length is now routinely double what it was only a few months ago.

Below youï¿½ll find a small sample of the topics brought up this week on amateur radioï¿½s most exciting net:

ï¿½ Over 500 students in Detroit are now being sent to the ï¿½Harambee Center,ï¿½ an Afro-centric school just constructed by the bankrupt city at the cost of millions of taxpayer dollars, much of which comes from White taxpayers. Although a financial ripoff, allowing ethnic groups like Detroitï¿½s Blacks to have their own cultural institutions could be a first step toward separation and real self-determination. (23 minutes)

ï¿½ A leak suggests that the Obama administration is considering eliminating testing as a requirement for public school promotion and graduation. This is insane, of course, but it is probably the only way that the racial achievement gap could be erased. (30 minutes)

ï¿½ In less than three months ï¿½ September, October, and November so far ï¿½ 26 banks have failed in the United States. Yet the billionairesï¿½ media have almost stopped reporting such failures. Just a short time ago, even one bank going down was a cause for alarm and major media coverage. (42 minutes)

ï¿½ Greece and Italy now have appointed ï¿½ not elected ï¿½ leaders who are actually bank employees, tasked with facilitating the further enslavement of their people to the international financiers. (47 minutes)

ï¿½ The mathematics of an explosion, in chemistry ï¿½ and of compound interest, in finance ï¿½ are substantially the same, which demonstrates the unsustainability and destructive nature of the existing banking system. (1 hour 34 minutes)

ï¿½ The economic basis of todayï¿½s society is phony money, debt, and uncontrolled growth. A better basis would be honest money, thrift, and sustainable growth ï¿½ which would be better for the environment, too. (2 hours 2 minutes)

ï¿½ Ron Paul has a stellar record when it comes to his efforts to dismantle the Evil Empire in Washington and its illegal agencies, unconstitutional laws, and murderous war machine. Why, then, does he tend to go along with that empireï¿½s policy of virtually unlimited Third World immigration? (2 hours 10 minutes)

ï¿½ Nations arenï¿½t destroyed by economic depressions. They recover. And nations almost always recover from devastating wars. The only thing which permanently destroys nations is adulteration and replacement of the population. Therefore preserving the natural racial, genetic character of the people is more important than any other social goal. (2 hours 19 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to these Liberty Net recordings at home, at work, in your car, or while hiking or jogging with your portable mp3 player. And remember his live feed during Net times that often lets you hear the Liberty Net via multiple receivers ï¿½ and chat too.

Check out, and check in to, amateur radioï¿½s most exciting net every Saturday night ï¿½ usually somewhere above 3950 kHz SSB (in recent weeks above that frequency by 30 kHz or so ï¿½ we have to be flexible to evade jammers and intruders), starting at 10PM Eastern Time.

Kudos and thanks go to Vic, W1WCR, for his decades of hard work for free speech and amateur radio!

True, the cell phone is a much more usable piece of equipment, and in most cases, much more powerful equipment than your average ham station, but good point, it doesn't require anymore effort than the ham equipment ... there are many more rules in amateur radio, though ...

And, one mans poison is another mans medicine ... and again, neither one should be allowed to "control freak" amateur radio.

But, the worst cases are the nutcases who confuse a simply radio license with a Ph.D. Those bassterds tend to be long winded, control freaks of the most evil type, hear only their opinions, too busy giving advise to everyone around them to take any, are avoided the by the sane mind, etc., etc.

You know 'em, we have all seen 'em and heard 'em, even on the ray-de-oh!

ABSOLUTELY NOT!

The are specifically to pass no law attempting to limit religion ... end of story. If they pass a law which bans anything religious, anywhere, they have already broken ties with the Constitution and now tread treasonous grounds ... it is like, DUH!

As the paragraph you provided so adequately points out:
"And in the first Amendment, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

Seven (7) state constitutions from the Revolution had outright bans was unthinkable everywhere else.

The NY Times would have everyone believe that Pat Robertson came over

Obama Campaign Launches

Obama 2012 launches AttackWatch.com.

News One is reporting that President Obama's 2012 campaign has launched AttackWatch.com, a website that will address the unfounded claims and fears lobbed at Obama. The president was hammered during his campaign and first term over myths that he was not an American citizen and was a Muslim. Users who sign up get the facts in response to false claims, with the goal that supporters of the president will spread the truth, informing the campaign and others of new smears as they arise.

Good luck with that, because there are so many lies about the president, it's ridiculous. Since so many people fail to read and think for themselves, many myths continue to circulate despite concrete evidence to refute the myths. Birthers, anyone? The campaign may want to develop a website promoting racial harmony and intercultural communication, since many of the myths are related to the president's race and upbringing. We're just saying ...

Besides ... the Constitution protects him, even at the cost of him, in complete ignorance, attempting to tear it apart ... and tosses his lot with main scream media and treasonous criminals ... standing up for what is correct should NEVER be done in moderation, it would be a sin.

I was not "attacking you," but reinforcing the point ... while I was not totally certain of your intent, my intent was to agree that "marching in step", or "micro-managing" was a symptom of a much larger mental disorder ... however, that disorder seems to be the elephant in the china closet, which no one notices ... or even supports!

If I were designing such a product, I'd do everything in my power to avoid end user alignment with testgear, for one very simple reason: it wipes out 99.9% of your potential customers, its business suicide.

Perhaps one could use resonators instead of LCs, if you dont like the interstation garbage of agced reaction.

Of course a valve radio is business suicide to begin with, performance per dollar has come a long way since the valve era. Number of valve radios currently on the market is zero, so no-one has managed to make them compete with 30cent ICs and 2cent transistors.

The LIBs who once purported to control Europe and believed they could run the world on mere dreams and talk upon the bodies of the true believers who followed them are gone. Today they are exposed, their memory despised, their countries in ruins. They had a shameless lust for power, a ceaseless quest for the unearned, a low opinion of man as an individual, a fear of intellectual honesty, proudly doing unto their own precisely what they forbid us to do to our adversaries. They were not just mistaken, but evil, and the focus of evil in the modern world. Their passing, their defeat, was a boon to mankind. But this was achieved not without sacrifice, not without those who measured the size and the power of the enemy and made the choice, to yield and collaborate, or to fight and prevail, because the struggle to remain free be no sacrifice except to those willing to live as their slave.

Valves have a place in audio, for the truly faithful. But then, audio only requires a few valve types, frequencies are easily managed, and circuitry remains stable for much longer periods of use. Whereas radio applications require more sophisticated valve construction, and significantly different valve types for given applications, to accomodate frequencies that stretch from 10X to 100000X audio frequencies.

What's comforting in radio with valve technology, is the general sense that the technology itself is accessible. And widely understood to be more forgiving. That valves may be removed, tested, and replaced by the techologically limited, and operated under conditions that would destroy solid state. Whereas, SS receivers, self service requires a much higher level of skill, with a much lower threshold of abuse. For those with limited technological experience, this can be daunting. Especially, as in the case of this receiver, during an emergency, where supply lines are uncertain, and technical support is nonexistent.

I can see where the OP is coming from. Build an accessible receiver that's fairly forgiving to extremes in noise, signal levels, voltage, and hostile events, and you'd have a generally useful rig for the general population in an emergency. It's a nice thought.

But as has been pointed out here multiple times, SS technology in a proper design has proven more resistant to EMP than generally believed, operating voltages are easier to generate, and manage, power requirements are lower, and performace of the technology is dramatically improved since the days of valve receivers. All at a fraction of the cost. And in an emergency, valve supplies will be just as short as SS components.

All of which points to the fact that a well designed kit radio for use in emergencies would be more like the Ten-Tec 1254, than it would be like a Hallicrafters S-40. And the Ten-Tec 1254 is a kit, costs $200, and requires no user alignment, but offers significant performance across the spectrum from LF through HF.

In a package that's available now.

And Heathkit is the model for that. They'd prealign tuned circuits, they'd have certain stages as preassembled modules, they'd build some relevant test equipment into the equipment (like those tv sets with some sort of metering in the back). One I always liked was a scanner, they included some parts to make up a 10.7MHz oscillator and mixer. The oscillator would provide the signal to align the IF strip, and then you'd mix the local oscillator with this outboard oscillator/mixer to get a signal on the signal frequency, to align the front end.

Heathkit of course did design for the beginner, I gather once they had the instructions together they found people who had never put a kit together to follow the instructions so they could make sure they made sense (and if followed properly, would result in a working piece of equipment). Despite the fuss about Heathkit being for the hobbyist, they always had taht color tv set, that musical organ, that boonie bike, that were aimed at people who just wanted something cheaper, and were willing to put some time into it. But that's why Heathkit shut down the kits, with time the sorts of things their was interest in got so complicated (and parts so small) that it was no longer cheap to come up with the instructions, pack the kit compared to just building it at the factory.

As for ceramic resonators, I think that is a key point. Design is the overall results. When companies put in ceramic resonators in everyday radios, they did away with a large part of the alignment, so even if the resonators were more expensive than IF transformers (I don't know) the reduction in alignment time was still significant.

As I pointed out, move to a higher IF, you may pay more for an IF filter, but you can do away with the need to gang the front end tuning with the local oscillator, which simplifies things mechanically but also gets rid fo a lot of troublesome alignment. It's relatively easy to get two stages of front end tuning to align together, just go for a peak, but ganging it with a local oscillator is more complicated.

The superhet alone is a concept that complicates something to make other things easier. Make things more complicated, the mixer and oscillator, and you dont' have to fuss with multiple stages on the RF frequency.

Sometimes the "simplest" solution ends up with more work than the more complicated one.

The Roots of Obama's Rage

The real Obama is a man shaped by experiences far different from those of most Americans; he is a much stranger, more determined, and exponentially more dangerous man than you'd ever imagined. He is not motivated by the civil rights struggles of African Americans in the 1960s—those battles leave him wholly untouched. He is not motivated by the socialist or Marxist propaganda that hypnotized a whole generation of wooly-minded academics and condescending liberals—those concepts also leave him cold.

What really motivates Barack Obama is an inherited rage—an often masked, but profound rage that comes from his African father; an anticolonialist rage against Western dominance, and most especially against the wealth and power of the very nation Barack Obama now leads. It is this rage that explains the previously inexplicable, and that gives us a startling look at what might lie ahead.

In The Roots of Obama's Rage you'll learn: Why Obama's economic policies are actually designed to make America poorer compared to the rest of the world Why Obama will welcome a nuclear Iran Why Obama sees America as a rogue nation—worse than North Korea The real reason Obama banished a bust of Winston Churchill from the White House and ordered NASA to praise the scientific contributions of Muslims Why Obama would like to make America's superpower status a thing of the past

Stunning, provocative, original, and telling—no one has better diagnosed who Obama is, what he intends to do, and why he poses an existential threat to America than Dinesh D'Souza in The Roots of Obama's Rage.

The abandonment by his father when he was an infant and by his stepfather at age 10 has left President Obama with a "father hunger" that influences everything from why he distances himself from pushy supporters, to his strong desire to compromise and bring people together, to his aggressive campaign to kill Osama bin Laden, says a psychoanalytic book out next week.
Obama has spent much of his life seeking out father figures, but most, like Rev. Jeremiah Wright and Vice President Biden, have disappointed him. "Obama searched for a father, for someone to relate to who could help him a strong man who knew what to do,"

What the nation ended up with, however, is "an almost tragic figure,"

As I once pointed out, long ago, now, in an amateur group, what needs to be done is to build a radio equiv to how PCs are now done.

First you would have a generic case, these could be made by anyone, in any design. The would provide the user with an abundance of choice in the looks of the rig.

Next, each section of the radio would simply be a plug in card, to a "mother board." You would have an rf section, which could cover any and all bands, depending on construction, it would simple plug into one of the slots on the motherboard. Audio, rf, filter, conversion, etc., etc. could be done this way.

You would have a basic set of all sections, and could expand, or upgrade as you would have -- or as becomes available.

It would change the face of radio, SW radios would become as numerous as PCs -- well, almost.

Most any small manufacturer could enter the market, and provide a case, rf section, audio section, etc. -- and expand from there, if they choose.

I simply can't get enough interest ... but the radio could be just am, am fm, am-fm-sw, am-fm-sw-vhf, am-fm-sw-vhf-uhf, am-fm-sw-vhf-uhf-shf, or any possible combination wanted ... this is an idea whose obvious advantage, for consumers, is simply screaming out for production!

Later, if one wished, he could just buy a larger standard case, move his receiver components over, buy a larger power supply, and drop in the appropriate transmitting section(s.)

We simply wait for the radio to leave the age of the horse and buggy ...

Regards,
JS

States are NOT the Federal Government. And the limits on the Government defined by the Constitution are limits on the Federal government.

The states may more or less do what they like.

But the distinction above is well made...there is a difference between not establishing a national religion and barring religion from being present in Government.

There is also a significant difference between religion and faith.

["Amendment I
Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;"]

That says CONGRESS ... it says Nothing of the States powers?

["Amendment X
The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."]

Amendment 10 says that since Congress was NOT given the power to make laws establishing religion..... that POWER belongs to the States. Is there some where that this power is prohibited to the States? I didn't see that amendment but I'd be open to creating it.

What is NOT a Federal power is a State power, or a Right of the people.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the Federal Government, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the Federal Government, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.
Section. 7.

All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the Federal Government: If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the Federal Government; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.
Section. 8.

He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the Federal Government.

I would absolutely state that the states MUST conduct laws, rules and regulations well within the bounds set by the Constitution -- obviously they are not. However, today, our public servants seem to be in competition as to which of them can get by with the most treasonous acts against the people which the SHOULD be serving ... indeed, I take strong excepting with them attempting to become "leaders" when their sole purpose is to be SERVANTS of the real government, the one of the people, by the people and for the people.

Beware Frank Rossio thinks he's living in the days of the ole wild west but what it all boils down to MK-ULTRA is going to make an example out good ole Franky boy into another Waco incident. Oh and when Frank was at the California Ham Radio show one of the most respected OO for shortwave radio enforcement was in the right. I was there.
Frank Rossio was talking with another ham looking over the gear when all of sudden Frank let loose a great big fart!
No apologies, excuses mes, no nothin'.
Now tell me you pissed too if you couldn't leave your gear and stuff to get a breath of fresh air? Then his friend John did an about face and ripped another one causing a ruckus over their behavior.
Some other tidbitds you might want to know about Frank Rossio.
During his weekly ventures into Los Angeles he cruises the truck stop glory holes looking for trucker cocklets to suck so he can affirm his low self esteem with the taste of tangy spunk coating Franks tonsils.
Right, Franky panky. Wingnuts got a cache of photographs showing Frank in provocative poses looking at the camera with prick juice squirted all over his wrinkled face.

Nor do they require a vast infrastructure without which they would be

Of course a valve radio is business suicide to begin with, performance per dollar has come a long way since the valve era. Number of valve radios currently on the market is zero, so no-one has managed to make them compete with 30cent ICs and 2cent transistors.

I intend to set the expectation that you must have a bench with a certain amount of basic test equipment and a proper soldering station to do this. If you will or can not do this a different hobby is for you.

Large numbers of Heathkits were built by people with NO skills, but larger numbers got half finished and thrown in the dumpster or taken to a shop and a large sum was paid to have them pro built to save face. I knew a TV shop owner who had a policy: He'd fix ANY Heathkit but he charged a one time fee equal to the kit price. Otherwise he would not even look at them. Heathkits did a poor job of teaching technicianship precisely because they were secretaryworthy.

Bauer built radio broadcasting gear the same way. A secretary could build them and at NAB one year one did.

I am not looking at a BIG market.

The only thing I can be certain of is that, DNA was coded by a programmer(s) much more knowledge and skill than any software engineer(s) we have today -- beyond that, who would be foolish enough to limit the creator(s?)

Undoubtedly, such works as found here: http://www.hinduwisdom.info/Vimanas.htm speak of beings which would have looked like gods to the peoples of the times ... either that, or ancient peoples read Buck Rogers!

But, in the end, when we find the real answer, I think the question will become, "Who created the creator(s?)"

No regen offers simplicity of use and selectivity, nor is the demod audio very good in most cases.

A real SW-3 with a transformer in place of the watchcase headset was tested by a friend in a screen room with HP test gear for SINAD and audio quality. The rig consisted of HP, 8640B and 339A as I recall and minimum AM distortion was six or seven percent, but that was only at something like -20 dBm input and 60% modulation. I can't remember what SINAD was.....it was dismal.

Passive TRF sets, i.e., "crystal radios" were capable of very good fidelity OTOH. The old Millen was capable of equaling the test set's own performance. Again you had to drive the hell out of it though.

Heathkit offered factory wired as well as kit equipment in many cases. But even the kits were more expensive than good used competitive equipment and sometimes more than respectable factory built.

The Japanese were part of the problem because they made it their business to acquire market share at the expense of profit. The Japanese in their salad days were content to take losses no American competitor would for market share, because they thought long term.
American companies quit thinking long term in the mid-70s because MBA thinking and stock market valuation was everything to the CEO. The Japanese were racially conscious, nationalistic, and group future driven and have always had a "co-opetitive" rather than dog-eat-dog mentality. What has sidelined Japan is the acceptance of American business theory.

In Amateur Radio products, Japanese companies sold equipment at cost or lower until there was no more American competition. In fact, they still sell them at prices amazingly low for their feature sets and costs of development. That is because they figure the American ham who is appliance operating instead of building is not learning and being the competitive future.

Conspiracy theory? No, experience. My father worked for a Motorola plant in the Midwest for decades. When a certain board member died, Mother M sold the plant and product line to Matsushita _for less than the real estate was worth_. I don't blame Matsushita for buying it and shutting it down, even though they swore they would not do so. It was a competitor they didn't need. But the people of the town, although many are very stupid, still needed those jobs. I don't blame them: they were acting rationally. It is we who acted irrationally in allowing such a deal to go through. Ford or GM would have been happy to buy up Japanese car plants in the 70s and do likewise, but the Japanese would not allow it. No sane nation would.

Sorry to get into politics.

Another fault with Heathkit equipment was often that mechanically they weren't very good. Their audio amps in the tube era were fine, because no mechanicals are needed there. In ham equipment they needed that and didn't have it. Collins and Drake were much much better. Yes, they cost more, but by the time I was in high school there were good buys in older Collins and Drake equipment because the first S/Line and 4 line buyers were going /SK already.

Another reason American companies abandoned ham and shortwave radio was that government defense contracts spoiled most companies that got them. Once spoiled they were like fat lazy schoolkids, and discipline was not forthcoming. Collins was always an avionics company, and into commercial broadcast as well. Art Collins kept them in the ham business but when he died they ditched it as fast as possible.

From Ten-Tec:

"Model 1254 combines the satisfaction of the kit building experience with the performance features expected in a modern HF receiver. Building oneï¿½s own receiver from a kit has launched countless thousands of people into communications careers or the hobbies of amateur radio and shortwave listening (ï¿½SWLingï¿½). You will build a true dual-conversion superhet with a microprocessor-controlled frequency synthesizer. Digital LED readout. Alignment is easy and does not require complicated equipment. You only need a volt-ohm meter and your ear; the kit provides its own 45 MHz test signal."

So there is some user alignment. But nothing that can't be accomplished with what's in the kit, and by following instructions.

It doesn't get any simpler than this.

Ten-Tec has a video channel on YouTube, where you can see the kit, watch it being constructed, adjusted and operated.

I've thought about putting one up at the cabin. But I've already got an HF-150, there, sitting next to an S-53, and an RF-3100.

Audio quality in an emergency doesn't have to be good. Only intelligible. And a regen can be quite simple to operate. Any tricks to learn will be learned as a matter of necessity. But for an inexpensive, and accessible kit form radio, a regen is not a particularly poor choice.

For instance, from Ten-Tec:

Model 1054 4 band regenerative shortwave receiver kit. Here it is: PROOF that the classic ï¿½first receiverï¿½ project need not be more expensive today than our favorite 1950ï¿½s kits. In fact, this great little receiver beats the pants off those 3-tube radios with the big plug-in coils. Excellent for clubs, classes and family activities. Band coverage: 49 meter SWL band, 40 meter ham band, 31 meter SWL band, plus 12-15 MHz tuning for daytime shortwave listening, 20 meter ham band and all those other shortwave sounds. You can enjoy the basic kit just by hooking up 9 to 12 volts DC, setting up a modest wire antenna (10 feet or more of hookup wire) and plugging in your own stereo headphones (1/8ï¿½ plug). Features convenient push-button bandswitching, on-off switch, ï¿½onï¿½ LED, tuning, volume, and regeneration control. Case, knobs, and speaker not included. We recommend case (undrilled, no holes) TPx-43 for this receiver, available in unpainted aluminum, black or charcoal. Order TP-43 for aluminum, TPB-43 black, TPC-43 charcoal. Building skill level: Beginner. No previous kit building experience needed. Must be able to solder, read instructions, and use small hand tools. $39

So, again, getting back to the OP's original premise: A kit form radio, useful in emergencies, that is simple to build...such animals are already available. Building one with tube tech, is simply a matter of bringing it to the party too late. More reliable, less expensive, more accessible, lower power, higher performance technology, has existed for decades. And is currently available in kit form at low cost.

They are the Gods..... and new "species" is NOT new DNA it is a continuation of the same old DNA created 2.5 billion years ago. It is another branch of the same DNA. I was speaking of a totally NEW and never seen on earth DNA that has no relation to life that has existed for 2.5 billion years from which we "evolved".

It's not fair to compare God to a UFO. People have actually seen UFOs.

Some people don't get it. To me, it looks like jumping to the last chapter of a book, reading the end, and making statements like, "Oh, yeah, I read the book." Or, yeah, "I know that story."

Evolutionists definitely wish to start with a universe with everything, all the elements in it--forming spheres and chunks ... truth is, something, someone, some intelligence has been here and left something.

It is only then you can begin the explainations of how complex operations and constructions have taken place without plans, without an intelligence -- again, that demonstrates all the intelligence of finding a 757 in the middle of a desert and claiming, "It just happened!"

Oh yeah, in my life, chit like that is going on all the time, indeed, look about yourself, I think some of these computers, cars, houses, electronics, etc., JUST HAPPENED! ... ROFLOL

Intelligence, design, construction ... remove any single one and nothing can happen ... nothing complex could exist.

I never seen a Dodo bird, indeed, I never will -- they are extinct, still, I believe they existed.

previous generations of peoples left claims they had seen 'em, and eaten 'em too!

Indeed, very ancient peoples describe the vitrification of stone to glass, the mushroom cloud of an atomic blast, the flight of spacecraft, etc. These are things which should only be known about since nuclear energy, atomic/hydrogen bombs, space flight, etc.

But hey, they might have just been thousands, tens of thousands, or even hundreds of thousands of years ahead of us in literary works ... and those are simply a version of Buck Rogers Adventures, scifi, from the past ... who knows at this point. I know there may be something there finding out ...

The 757 may be somewhere in the universe. Where it just happened!

And/Or at any time in any space. The chance of a human seeing it is like the odds of a New and different life form appearing on earth. 14.5 Billion years and time and space has aligned only once resulting in DNA life being created that could reproduce its self here on planet earth.

Truth be told, I think 9/10ths of the people in the states are fed up, dissatisfied, don't want what is going on, to be going on, don't support the unfair taxes, fees, fines, rules, regulations, perks to public servants, budgets, expenditures, wars, exportation of American jobs, etc., etc. -- and endless list which probably touches on everything.

However, when you are slaves like we are, when you have had the government of the people, by the people and for the people usurped by criminals promising to support the people and obey the people, but actually enslaving the people for nothing more than "milking for wealth", to feed to their masters, we live as we do now.

We are nothing more than slaves which are too stupid to realize they have been enslaved -- however, a few more do seem to wake up each and everyday ...

Absolutely! You got it!

Along with our "creator given rights, privileges and freedoms" are our creator given plants ... no individual, group or government has any right, what-so-ever, to make any illegal.

These belligerent fools in government overstep their bounds with criminal and evil intents -- but the enslaved mind will never utter a word of complaint ...

The only think that is simple is you.

If you do not have skin cancer, and have ever stood outside without having a peeling sunburn within moments, thank the ozone layer, thank the ban on CFCs, and thank a liberal. If you have not died in a heat wave, drought, hurricane, flood, wildfire, or other climate change disaster, and like the idea of your children and grandchildren not living in desert wastelands, thank a liberal. If you have ever breathed clean air or drank clean water, thank a liberal. If no woman you know has died or been maimed in a back-alley Abortion, thank a liberal. If you have never been lynched, or had your children firebombed in a church, thank a liberal. If you are glad we don't live in a right-wing dictatorship along the lines of what conservatives overtly and covertly created in Iran, Guatamala, Nicaragua, the Dominican Republic, the Congo, Chile, Brazil, El Salvador, the Phillipines, Indonesia and many others, thank a liberal. If you have ever used Medicare, thank a liberal. If you have not gotten cancer from radiation, thank the Nuclear test ban and thank a liberal. If you have ever sat on a public seat, drank from a drinking fountain, stood on a bus, or done anything in public without worrying about being beaten up for being in the wrong section for your skin color, thank a liberal. If you've ever driven on an interstate highway, thank a liberal. If you grew up in a family of less than 12 kids, like the idea of being able to choose if you have 12 kids or not, if you don't live in an overpopulated third world slum, or just think birth control is a good idea, thank a liberal. If your family benefited from the GI Bill of Rights, FHA Mortgages, and so forth, thank a liberal. If you have ever bought anything from Europe, and are glad the Marshall plan kept it from remained a bombed-out shell or falling to communism or neo-fascism, thank a liberal. If you are glad that the Nazis don't control half the world (conservatives opposed joining World War 2 until it was forced on them) thank a liberal. If you have ever eaten food (agricultural subsidies), flicked on a light switch (rural electrification) or benefited from the Tennessee Valley Authority, thank a liberal. If you ever drank a beer or a glass of wine without being thrown in jail, thank a liberal. If you are not a land-owning white male, but have voted, thank a liberal. If you have not died from tainted meat, been prescribed something useless or poisonous by a quack doctor, have not given your children cough syrup which turned out to have heroin as its secret ingredient, thank a liberal. (and Nixon) If your workplace is safe and you are paid a living wage, including overtime; if you enjoy a 40-hour week and you are allowed to join a union to protect your rights without being lynched, thank a liberal. If you've ever seen a national park, and it hadn't been strip mined and clearcut into a desert wasteland, thank a liberal. If you have never suffered from an economy of massive deflation, and have never even heard of an economic phenomenon called a "panic", thank a liberal. If your children go to school instead of working in coal mines, thank a liberal. If you're a Native American and have not been killed or died in a concentration camp, or if you live near Native Americans and are not at war with them, thank a liberal. If you have an industrial or high-tech job - or really, any job other than those available in a slave-powered cash crop economy (ie, a third world economy) thank a liberal. If you're not a slave or "indentured servant" (white slave), don't think protection of slavery belongs in the constitution, if you've never been chained to a boat where half the passengers die, been whipped, had your family split up, been forced to "breed" with another slave you've never met, been raped by your boss, or killed for not being profitable, thank a liberal. If you oppose political parties starting massive wars to destroy America, just because they lost the election, and killing hundreds of thousands of Americans in process - if you just don't have that much fanatical hatred of Lincoln's policy of to restricting slavery to states where it already existed, thank a liberal. If you're part-Irish, Catholic, Jewish, or for that matter anything not Anglo-Saxon Protestant, and are allowed to live in America, and are not harassed and attacked for failing to be born Anglo-Saxon Protestant, or if you've ever bought or used anything built by a non-ASP American, thank a liberal. If you kind of like freedom of speech, and don't want the state government to be able to censor you - (you think the 14th amendment is a good idea) - thank a liberal. If you have ever bought or sold anything transported by the transcontinental railroad, or eaten food from a farm created by the railroad, thank a liberal. If you think the US constitution is pretty cool, and have ever traveled too or done business with a country whose democracy was inspired by the American revolution, thank a liberal. If you have not been drafted and used as cannon-fodder in some war caused by some petty insult between nobles, clan leaders, or other various overfed dictators, or suffered rape or looting in one of those countless wars, thank a liberal. If you have not been tortured to death in a religious inquisition, thank a liberal. If you don't have to walk though ankle-deep sewage in the streets (because sewers are big gummint), thank a liberal. If you have ever done anything that is a religious or superstitious taboo (ie, done anything at all) without being stoned to death or cast out as a heretic, thank a liberal. If you have never been raped, and then had the rapist escape punishment on the grounds that he marry you, thank a liberal. If you are not a slave toiling to build a pyramid for some lazy dictator who's so spoiled he thinks he's god, and won't even see it until he's dead, thank a liberal. If you have not been killed as a human sacrifice in the name of some god, thank a liberal. In short, if you've ever enjoyed anything of the post-stone-age world, thank a liberal. ...And if not, become a conservative. "Liberal policies made America the freest, wealthiest, most successful and most powerful nation in human history. Conservatism in power always threatens to undo that national progress, and is almost always frustrated by the innate decency and democratic instincts of the American people..." - Joe Conason from http://www.dkosopedia.com/wiki/Thank_a_liberal

The real Obama is a man shaped by experiences far different from those of most Americans; he is a much stranger, more determined, and exponentially more dangerous man than you'd ever imagined. He is not motivated by the civil rights struggles of African Americans in the 1960s—those battles leave him wholly untouched. He is not motivated by the socialist or Marxist propaganda that hypnotized a whole generation of wooly-minded academics and condescending liberals—those concepts also leave him cold.

What really motivates Barack Obama is an inherited rage—an often masked, but profound rage that comes from his African father; an anticolonialist rage against Western dominance, and most especially against the wealth and power of the very nation Barack Obama now leads. It is this rage that explains the previously inexplicable, and that gives us a startling look at what might lie ahead.

In The Roots of Obama's Rage you'll learn: Why Obama's economic policies are actually designed to make America poorer compared to the rest of the world Why Obama will welcome a nuclear Iran Why Obama sees America as a rogue nation—worse than North Korea The real reason Obama banished a bust of Winston Churchill from the White House and ordered NASA to praise the scientific contributions of Muslims Why Obama would like to make America's superpower status a thing of the past

Stunning, provocative, original, and telling—no one has better diagnosed who Obama is, what he intends to do, and why he poses an existential threat to America than Dinesh D'Souza in The Roots of Obama's Rage.

This is the horrifying obviousness of the they follow a leadership that is not just Mistaken, but EVIL.

Better yet, just vote for Ron Paul. The "two party system" has obviously been compromised. You simply are given a choice of "two crooks", "two of the same", "two gawd-damn-liars", etc.

Break the "football team mentality" and don't choose either team in the fixed game ...

Well 'if' you want to Vote for Ron Paul it will have to be as a Write-In -cause- Ron Paul will not be getting the Republican Nomination in 2012
-the-'fix'-is-in-yep-the-'fix'-is-in-
Romney = The 1%
Obama = The 1%
Gingrich = The 1%
Check the 'Write-In' Box of the 2012 Prez-A-Duntz-ial
Election Ballot and -write-in- "99%" {The 99%}
Just Say 'No' To Obama Liberal {Rich} Democrat 1%ers
-and- Just Say 'No' To The Republicans 1%ers VOTE HELL 'NO' ! ON THE TWO PARTY SYSTEM !

Once again most previous posters to this thread completely missed the point. Their gratuitous attempt at humor matches that that one can expect from a 9 year old.

Hils...congratulations. You found what serious SWLs find every day. There's a lot on short wave but it requires savvy and persistence. The doomsayers who whine that "shortwave is dead" are morons with the attention span of a cat and have no clue as to what short wave listening requires. That is why short wave listeners...serious short wave listeners...deserve respect and the rest can go back to their ipods and video games.

Well done.

When I was a kid, I always heard an uncle of mine say that the amount of time you spend listening to others should equal at least 10x the amount of time you spend talking. I didn't realize at the time just how true this was.

Your ignorance is quite awesome, it stands strong against the forces of sanity which would destroy it -- while it feeds the status quo.

SW radio is like most everything else, simply inconsequential while it remains steadfastly staunch in its' support of political correctness.

This can all change quickly and almost overnight, all SW has to do is make a pledge to support truth, right, and humanity -- simply say chit when there is a mouthful to be discussed. With all the hot issues today -- USAs' global wars of imperialism, enslaving of the many to support the few in lavish lives, GMO crops, poisoning of the lands with toxins (massive bee deaths), etc., etc. -- one has to wonder why the extraordinaire means are being enacted to avoid discussions on these ... SW radio could fill this gap -- and so much more ...

The Great (and awesome) Liberty Net is a blueprint of what would attack viewers like flies to the dead and dying carcass of the evil which stalks the lands like an elephant in a china closet -- enacting massive destruction and suffering, but remaining unseen, unheard, unnoticed.

Anytime I ever found an individual in my life who followed that rule, I dumped them -- especially the college professors!

It is only the ignorant, the politically correct, those stuck in ruts, those worshiping government order, those lacking in education, those engaged in crime, etc. who needs follow that advice. Or simply, it is best not to hear from criminals, thugs, government "leaders", corporate America, etc.

All the drug laws should be dumped.
Cheap opiate command outrageous prices because they are illegal.

We didn’t always have drug laws.

Growing it in your closet for your own use is NOT commerce, else they would consider tying your shoes commerce also.

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown.
Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2008
FCC rules and Sep 2009 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:
http://www.ntia.doc.gov/osmhome/redbook/redbook.html

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is 5 kHz. Frequencies above 10000 kHz tend to propagate better during the day;
frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.

Please e-mail suggestions and corrections to billmc@agora.rdrop.com.

Phone line as SW antenna
Bill McFadden
billmc@agora.rdrop.com

Changes preceded by "|".

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area.
Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the
| telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead.
Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should
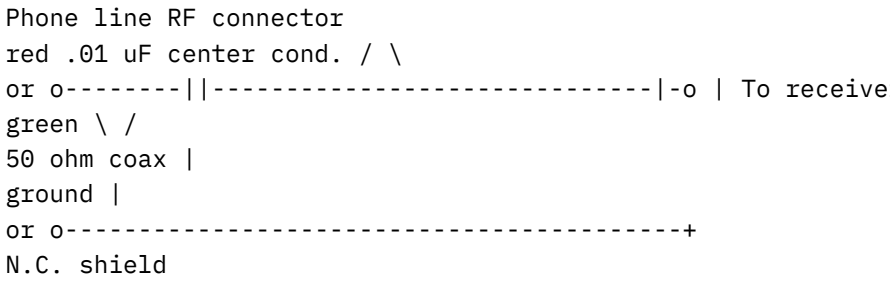
| be rated 250 volts or higher.



N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

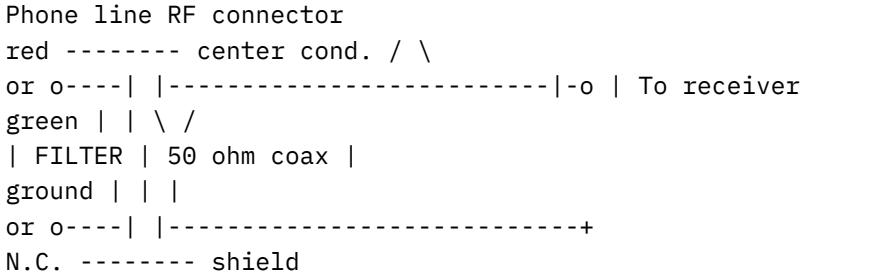
A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:



| RECOMMENDED FILTERS
| If you don't want to make your own filters, the following have good
| performance, are well-built and affordable:
|
| Model 400 BCB interference filter (3.5 MHz highpass)

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#3
| (scroll down a bit to see the model 420)
| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm
| terminal):

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------
```

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

Parts for the filters can be obtained from the following source:

While scanning the 25 meter SWBC band, I noticed some strange signals between 1830 and 1930 UTC. Sounded like time pulses every other second when compared to WWV. Strong in both AM and USB, only barely audible in LSB or lower sync. Incredible range of // oddball frequencies: 11098.5, 11220.7, 11342.1, 11587.1, 11648.1, 11709.2, 11892.5, 11953.5, 12105 (underneath WTWW), 12136.6, 12190.1, 12228.2, 12442.1, 12503, 12533.6, 12686.3. I finally gave up, so there are probably more. Some frequencies might be off by 100 Hertz, since i was using an old Sony ICF-2010. Also, some were incredibly strong, others sounded further away.

Any ideas?

But.... 99% of radio buyers have little idea what features they want, and the very slow change in feature sets of each module are in most cases of close to zero interest to end users. Plus radios seldom become obsolete - even 1920s sets are still usable, for the few of us that wish to.

Unit radio did of course exist in the early 20s, when radio technology really was changing fast, and it made a significant difference. Come the 30s it was gone though, even though the technology was still changing fast. End users didn't vote for it.

A slightly similar approach was also tried in tv in the 70s, with lots of small pcbs that could each be replaced affordably if it ever failed. But ultimately buyers just wanted the cheapest, not to pay for later repairability.

Does anyone other than John think there's commercial mileage in modular radio now?

I had one of those and when there was a failure discovered that just one board cost half what the entire TV set had, and that was with me doing the diagnosis, meaning I didn't have the cost of a 'TV service man' plowed on top of it. That doesn't strike me as a terribly good deal on 'repairability'.

It would, of course, go dead with a hurricane coming so I didn't have much time and used the "hold in breaker, see what smokes" test. A quick check of the schematic to see why and what else might have gone with it and I fixed the thing with a couple of zeners and a resistor.

I often wonder if the 'modular PCB' idea was so 'tube test and replace' repairmen could use the same technique on the solid state stuff but a $250 PCB isn't a 3 buck tube. The economics just don't work.

>Does anyone other than John think there's commercial mileage in >modular radio now?

I don't because, for one, the 'computer' analogy is flawed. Computer peripherals operate parallel on a common bus and they're not dependent on the others. You can have 'no extras' and still have a computer, or pick and chose whatever 'extra' things you want, like a TV tuner card.
It's the common, well defined, bus that makes this work but, even then, it isn't 'free', which is why you see low cost PCs with all the 'typical' things stuffed onto the motherboard and maybe one or two 'expansion slot(s)', if any.

A radio, on the other hand, is essentially serial in operation with signal coming in one end and out the other. Remove any part and you no longer have a radio so you 'need them all' to begin with and there's little reason to later change it even if you could (unlikely) figure out how to enforce some common 'interface' at every stage through the whole thing. And then there's the added cost at every single interface break.

Bottom line, for the performance/cost ratio you can't beat solid state and a robot assembling the stuff at warp speed. And it can be done so cheaply you're better off to chuck it and buy another one assembled at warp speed.

This is nonsense.

That article describes a software company that is trying to get off the ground. Digital broadcasting has been reviewed worldwide the last several years, especially on short wave and found not to be viable because of propagation etc. Every country's government that has looked at various schemes to change to digital (including the USA) has abandoned it or moving away from it.

Not as portrayed, and certainly not as a general radio.

There have been articles about building in modular form and even some kits that were modular, and of course it's a great form for experimenting, why remake the whole radio if you want to try a new IF strip or add a new detector? Or buy the modules you want to build up something, rather than be stuck with what the complete radio the company sells.

But there can't be a general bus, one module takes its input from the antenna or a previous module, and its output goes to the next module, those have to be well isolated. The power supply is standard to each module, the whole point of three terminal regulators was to make regulation specific to boards rather than one big power supply feeding everything. But control lines will be different depending on the function of the module, some requiring lots of lines, others requiring few or none at all.

And there's no way it would be for everyone. The average radio user doesn't care, they just want AM/FM radio, nowadays not even AM and a radio is a radio, once you have one for average use there's no need for improvement.

A modular radio might be interesting to the hobbyist, which of course is where the concept has travelled. It's there in all the VHF converters described in the hobby magazines, getting extra coverage with a shortwave radio at the cost of a "module", ie converter, rather than having to build a whole new radio. It's the hobbyist that wants to try things, it's the hobbyist that is interested in the radio in itself. They are the ones who might want to do better on longwave, or listen to the police band (even then, or a lot of that type of hobbyist, existing scanners are more than enough).

For a small company aimed at the hobbyist, modules make sense. They dont' ahve to offer multiple receivers, just enough modules for someone to put together what they want. I long ago argued with a friend that if he was going to go into a small electronic business, just selling boards made sense, since then he's not involved in dealing with cabinetry. The hobbyist can buy the modules and then take care of putting it in a case.

It's a fairly limited market, yet at one point was one that might do okay. You can have a successful business without making loads of profit, and indeed doing away with things like UL approval by using an existing AC adapter or having the buyer come up with one keeps overhead down, as does the lack of cabinetry. Find a market that really exists, and cater to it, you may not be rich but the business may keep going.

I have no idea if the market is there anymore. I've been going through old magazines lately, and it reminds me how much time and even money I spent on magazines, the hobby electronic ones and the ham magazines, and I feel detached to it as the magazines disappeared, virtually no hobby electronic magazines in North America, and the ham magazines dwindling but more important less available on newsstands than in the old days. The magazines were pretty important, and I'm not sure they really have been replaced with other things. If nothing else, they were way to keep track of the companies that sold kits and parts.

A different way to look at it is to think about commercial shortwave receivers. They have become really cheap, and fairly good. I paid somewhere around $80 for a Hallicrafters S-120A (the transistorized one) in the summer of 1971, the most I could afford, the cheapest receiver I could find locally. It was junk, the only good thing about it was I had no experience so I didn't know how bad it was for a bit. You can get a Grundig Yacht Boy 400 (or whatever the same model in a different cabinet is) for a hundred dollars, some of the other Etons for the same complete with synchronous detector. For that matter, I am finding sw receivers at rummage and garage sales now for pretty low amounts. That Grundig Satellite 700 for 2.00 at the Rotary Club sale, that Sony ICF-SW1 at a garage sale in September for 10.00 (and then about half an hour later an Eton Mini 300 for 2.00 at another garage sale, though that is junk).

They are infinitely better than the old low end analog receivers. People talk about buying all kinds of models, but nobody seems to think that if a hundred dollars is seen as "disposable" then why not buy a radio to modify extensively?

Buy one and put it into a bigger cabinet. Make it a desktop physically, complete with a good tuning knob on the front panel. Even receivers with up/down buttons can be tuned with a tuning knob. All those people who judge a radio by "sound", they can put a nice big speaker in the cabinet, though better to use an external speaker. Add better lighting to the LCD display. Add that Q-multiplier. Add some filters if you can get some at the proper IF frequency. The radio becomes the foundation to customize. Add an FM IF strip and then feed the radio with converters to hear those higher bands. Put some more front end selectivity in the box, yes suddenly you'd have to tune it in addition to the tuning knob, but that's the way it used to be on the good receivers anyway. It doesn't have fine enough tuning? Then add a variable capacitor across the second conversion oscillator (either directory or via a varicap), and you can get a fine tuning knob that isn't linked to the BFO. For that matter, one could splurge and add crystal controlled BFO, getting the frequencies to be in the right place in relation to the IF filter.

What's wrong with current receivers that can be improved with a little bit of work? Some things can't be fixed, but a lot of these new receivers offer a pretty good foundation compared to what there was in the old days.

YOu start with a reasonably good receiver, you see the low cost so you aren't afraid to hurt it, and you make it the receiver you want, just like someone would want those modules for.

1. With really good propagation, some of the various shortwave maritime surveillance radars might be showing up for far away.

2. I'm getting a bunch of crap on the higher bands these days, but it's local. The last time I tracked down this particular crud, my closest guess was either an ultrasonic rodent repeller or some construction equipment battery charger. Didn't feel like knocking on doors and asking my neighbors if they had a bad rat problem. I remember reading some ads for pest repellers where they bragged about the extra added electromagnetic radiation feature.

3. It's that season when your neighbors are draping their eaves with well lit interference antennas.

Liberty Net: November 26, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/12/liberty-net-november-26-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE LIBERTY NET is rapidly becoming more and more well-known, and is taking advantage of Internet and studio-type technology in order to bring a maximum number of free voices to light in this increasingly dark age.

For 37 years, the net has provided a communications point for amateur radio operators who wereni¿½t afraid to exercise their inherent rights of free speech and free thought.

Here are a few of my notes from the most recent session of this amazing net:

ï¿½ There is no reason not to simply tear up the government debt held by the Federal Reserve, unless we consider the continued enslavement of ourselves and our children to the bankers as the primary purpose of our society. (14 minutes)

ï¿½ As police departments become more and more beholden to the regime in Washington, they behave more like political secret police than like the ï¿½officer friendlyï¿½ of yesteryear. To protect our rights and freedoms, we need to constantly be aware of that fact. (21 minutes)

ï¿½ ï¿½Joys of Diversityï¿½ department: Non-White gangs are now kidnapping our young women and, after raping them, are forcibly tattooing them to show their ï¿½ownershipï¿½ of them to other gangs. (1 hour 9 minutes)

ï¿½ A new bill ï¿½ S1867 ï¿½ would give the Washington regimeï¿½s military the right to imprison any American citizen indefinitely without trial or even specific charges. (1 hour 19 minutes)

ï¿½ Take a guess who the sponsors of S1867 are ï¿½ the bill that allows the regimeï¿½s military to imprison anyone it chooses. The answer: none other than John McCain and Carl Levin. (1 hour 36 minutes)

ï¿½ Is there a connection between the new dictatorial police powers sought by the Washington regime and the increasing rebellions against the bankers and the governments they own in Greece, Iceland, and other European countries ï¿½ rebellions which might break out here, as presaged by Occupy Wall Street? (1 hour 54 minutes)

ï¿½ Through HR3261, the so-called SOPA Act, and a parallel act in the Senate, Chuck Schumer and John McCain and other regime operatives would gain the right to shut down any Web site ï¿½ using ï¿½copyright violationsï¿½ as a pretext, but in reality for whatever reason they choose. (2 hours 39 minutes)

ï¿½ Why were violent anti-WTO protesters allowed free reign to trash Seattle, while completely peaceful protesters were arrested? Is there an agenda to create a demand for draconian ï¿½securityï¿½ laws? (3 hours 9 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to these Liberty Net recordings at home, at work, in your car, or while hiking or jogging with your portable mp3 player. And remember the live feed during Net times that lets you hear the Liberty Net via multiple receivers ï¿½ and chat too.

Remember that all our Internet adjuncts are intended just to enhance the real purpose of the net, which is live and free communication between amateur operators. So please check in to the Liberty Net every Saturday night, usually to be found somewhere in that part of 75 meters above 3950 kHz ï¿½ we have to be flexible to evade jammers and intruders ï¿½ starting at 10PM Eastern Time. Once heard, the sound of W1WCRï¿½s distinctive and powerful signal is unmistakable and youï¿½ll have no trouble finding us and checking in.

Kudos and thanks go to Vic, W1WCR, for his decades of hard work for free speech and amateur radio, and to all of you for checking in!

Nope, not ALE. Only one non-ping pulse every two seconds.
Sounds like slow time signals.
